State attorneys general have broad authority and discretion to investigate and prosecute a wide range of conduct including healthcare and securities fraud, antitrust violations, violations of privacy and data protection, environmental, and consumer protection laws. Facing an inquiry or litigation from a state attorney general can pose significant legal, reputational, and financial risks for any business, regardless of industry or size.

The Haynes Boone State Attorneys General Investigations practice group has extensive experience representing clients under investigation by attorney general offices across the country and in defending our clients in litigation with state regulators. We have successfully resolved complex and high stakes matters involving multiple states, state and federal agencies, and private plaintiffs, as well as individual state actions. We have also helped our clients avoid or minimize enforcement actions by proactively engaging with state attorneys general and demonstrating compliance with applicable laws and regulations.

Our team includes former state and federal prosecutors and career defense lawyers who bring a deep understanding of the priorities, perspectives, and practices of state attorneys general and their staff. We leverage our relationships and reputation with state attorneys general offices to effectively advocate for our clients and achieve favorable outcomes. We also work closely with our clients to develop and implement strategies to prevent, prepare for, and respond to state attorney general inquiries and litigation, and to manage the potential impact on their business operations, public relations, and regulatory compliance.

Whether you are facing a single-state or multi-state investigation or litigation or seeking to enhance your compliance and risk management programs, we can provide the guidance, representation, and advocacy you need to protect your interests and achieve your objectives.
