INTRODUCTION

This Article addresses the confluence of procedural changes that have shaped summary judgment practice. These changes are built upon a framework set out in the federal summary judgment trilogy—Celotex,¹ Matsushita,² and *Liberty Lobby*³—and the application of the Texas “no-evidence” summary judgment rule.⁴ Also at play are the gatekeeping functions expressed in the U.S. Supreme Court opinion in *Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc.*⁵ and the Texas Supreme Court opinion in

Most recently, the advent of a “reasonable juror” standard for evaluating the sufficiency of the evidence plays a role in the changing framework upon which summary judgment practice has been built.⁷ Upon these pillars, this Article examines the procedural and substantive aspects of obtaining, opposing, and appealing a summary judgment, reviews the types of cases amenable to summary judgment, and, finally, provides an overview of federal summary judgment practice.

Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 166a,⁸ which governs summary judgment practice,⁹ permits a party to obtain a prompt disposition of a case involving “patently unmeritorious claims and untenable defenses.”¹⁰ The rule provides a means of summarily terminating a case when a question of law is involved and no genuine issue of material fact exists.¹¹

When it was adopted in 1949¹² the purpose of the rule was, and remains, to eliminate delay and expense.¹³ Motions for summary judgment or partial summary judgment are used to win cases, obtain discovery, narrow issues, educate the judge about the case, and determine an opponent’s strategy.

Even though the function of a summary judgment is not to deprive litigants of the right to a trial by jury,¹⁴ the practical effect of applying the complex and technical principles in zealously prosecuting summary judgment motions results in a reduced number of cases presented to a jury. Much has been written about the “vanishing jury trial” and the purported causes of this phenomenon,¹⁵ of which there are many: the ever-increasing cost of litigation,¹⁶ alternative dispute resolution methods such as mediation and particularly arbitration,¹⁷ tort reform,¹⁸ heightened pleading standards,¹⁹ fear of the runaway jury,²⁰ and perhaps even the reduction in the number of seasoned litigators with the skill and experience to take a case to trial.²¹ No doubt these all have contributed to the significant decline in the number of cases actually tried to juries in federal and state courts each year. Also contributing significantly to the demise of the jury trial are procedural reforms and precedent, including the heightened scrutiny placed on expert testimony²² and the seeming increase in the availability of summary judgment.²³

STATE SUMMARY JUDGMENT PRACTICE

I. PROCEDURE

The decision to file a motion for summary judgment rests on many factors including the facts, the applicable law, the client, the judge, and strategy.

A. Motion for Summary Judgment

The summary judgment process begins with the filing of a motion for summary judgment.²⁴ Unless a party to the suit files a motion for summary judgment, no court has the power to render a judgment.²⁵ Even though it properly grants a summary judgment to one party, a court may not grant summary judgment to another party who did not move for summary judgment or join in the moving party's motion.²⁶

A motion for summary judgment is a "trial on paper."²⁷ Therefore, it should mirror a good trial presentation: "a clear theme that grabs the reader's attention, a persuasive story, and, most importantly, a clear analysis of the facts and the law that demonstrates why it should be granted."²⁸

22. See Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 579 (1993) (adopting a stricter test for admissibility of expert testimony); E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson, 923 S.W.2d 549, 556 (Tex. 1995) (adopting the Daubert test).

23. See Royal Ferguson, Civil Jury Trials R.I.P.? Can It Actually Happen in America?, 40 ST. MARY'S L.J. 795, 854 (discussing the "propensity of lawyers to file summary judgment motions as a matter of course in all of their cases"); Paul W. Mollica, Federal Summary Judgment at High Tide, 84 MARQ. L. REV. 141, 167-73 (2000) (discussing the increasing reach of summary judgment proceedings); see also Chief Judge Anthony J. Scirica, Judge's Response to Professors Hazard and Taruffo, 25 PENN ST. INT'L L. REV. 519, 527 (2006) (recognizing the disposition of cases on summary judgment as contributing to the decline in jury trials).

28. Id.

Unlike trial practice, summary judgment practice is not a battle of oration, but of paper. Thus, these hallmarks of a winning trial strategy must be translated to the written word. The value of clear, persuasive writing cannot be overstated.

1. General Requirements and Uses

a. Specification Requirement. A motion for summary judgment must rest on the grounds expressly presented in the motion.²⁹ Unless a claim or affirmative defense is specifically addressed in the motion for summary judgment, a court cannot grant summary judgment on it.³⁰ The motion must state, with specificity, the grounds upon which the movant is relying.³¹ The rationale for this requirement is to force the movant to define the issues and give the nonmovant adequate notice for opposing the motion.³²

An amended or substituted motion for summary judgment supersedes any preceding motion.³³ A ground contained in an initial summary judgment motion, but not included in a later amended motion, may not be used to support the affirmance of a summary judgment on appeal.³⁴

29. Sci. Spectrum, Inc. v. Martinez, 941 S.W.2d 910, 912 (Tex. 1997); McConnell v. Southside Indep. Sch. Dist., 858 S.W.2d 337, 339 (Tex. 1993) (quoting Westbrook Constr. Co. v. Fid. Nat'l Bank of Dallas, 813 S.W.2d 752, 754 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 1991, writ denied)); see also City of Midland v. O'Bryant, 18 S.W.3d 209, 218 (Tex. 2000) (holding that the trial court should not have granted summary judgment on an issue that was not presented).

30. Johnson v. Brewer & Pritchard, P.C., 73 S.W.3d 193, 204 (Tex. 2002); Sci. Spectrum, 941 S.W.2d at 912 (limiting summary judgment to those grounds expressly presented in the motion).

31. Brewer & Pritchard, 73 S.W.3d at 204; Stiles v. Resolution Trust Corp., 867 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Tex. 1993); Great-Ness Profl Servs., Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank of Louisville, 704 S.W.2d 916, 918 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1986, no writ) (misclassifying the specific ground for summary judgment as a “suit on a sworn account” was sufficient to defeat summary judgment, even though the affidavit in support and the balance of the motion for summary judgment correctly alluded to a cause of action based upon a breach of a lease agreement).

32. Timpte Indus., Inc. v. Gish, 286 S.W.3d 306, 311 (Tex. 2009); Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Alvarez, 576 S.W.2d 771, 772 (Tex. 1978); see also McConnell, 858 S.W.2d at 343–44 (stating that by requiring movant to expressly set forth grounds in the summary judgment motion, the nonmovant has the grounds for summary judgment narrowly focused and does not have to argue every ground vaguely referred to in the motion).

33. Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Finlan, 27 S.W.3d 220, 231 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2000, pet. denied); see also Padilla v. LaFrance, 907 S.W.2d 454, 459 (Tex. 1995) (stating that a motion for summary judgment would have to be considered an amended or substituted version in order to supersede the previous motion).

34. State v. Seventeen Thousand & No/100 Dollars U.S. Currency, 809 S.W.2d 637, 639 (Tex. App.—Corpus Christi 1991, no writ) (explaining that an amended motion for summary judgment “supplants the previous motion, which may no longer be considered”).

To determine if the grounds are expressly presented in the motion, neither the court nor the movant may rely on supporting briefs or summary judgment evidence.³⁵ Nor may a trial court grant more relief than requested in the motion for summary judgment.³⁶ Because a party can move for partial summary judgment,³⁷ omission of a claim from a motion for summary judgment does not waive the claim. Even though the grounds for summary judgment must appear in the motion itself, summary judgment evidence need not be set out or described in the motion to be considered.³⁸ Nonetheless, the usual practice, though not required by the supreme court, is to describe the summary judgment evidence.³⁹

b. Categories of Summary Judgments. Summary judgments typically are divided into two categories. A “traditional” summary judgment is based on the movant’s contention that no genuine issue exists for any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.⁴⁰ A “no-evidence” summary judgment is based on the movant’s contention “that there is no evidence of one or more essential elements of a claim or defense on which an adverse party would have the burden of proof at trial.”⁴¹

Regardless of its burden of proof at trial, either party may file a motion for summary judgment by establishing each element of its claim or defense.⁴² The party without the burden of proof also may file a motion for summary judgment urging that there is no evidence to support the other party’s claims or affirmative defenses.⁴³ A party with the burden of proof may never properly file a no-evidence summary judgment on its claims or defenses, nor may purely legal issues be the subject of a no-evidence summary judgment.⁴⁴ A no-evidence summary judgment may not be used by a defendant on its affirmative defense.⁴⁵

A summary judgment motion may also be used when the evidence or lack of it is not the issue. Summary judgment is proper when the parties do not dispute relevant facts.⁴⁶ Where “the issues raised are based on undisputed facts, the reviewing court may determine the questions presented as a matter of law.”⁴⁷ Summary judgment motions may be used to ask a court to construe a statute.⁴⁸ For example, in Curtis v. Anderson, the court interpreted section 1.108 of the Texas Family Code to determine that an agreement concerning return of an engagement ring must be in writing to be enforceable.⁴⁹ In PAJ, Inc. v. Hanover Insurance Co., the court determined the effect on coverage when an insured fails to timely notify its insurer of a claim but the insurer suffers no harm as a result.⁵⁰

Similarly, summary judgments may be used to construe the meaning of contract provisions.⁵¹ They may also be used to resolve certain jurisdictional claims.⁵²

2. Traditional Motion for Summary Judgment. To obtain relief through a traditional motion for summary judgment, the movant must establish that no issue of material fact exists and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.⁵³ A defendant who moves for summary judgment must either disprove at least one element of each of the plaintiff’s causes of action or plead and conclusively establish each essential element of any affirmative defense, thereby rebutting the plaintiff's causes of action.⁵⁴ A plaintiff must show entitlement to prevail on each element of the cause of action, except damages.⁵⁵

If the movant's motion and summary judgment evidence facially establish the movant's right to judgment as a matter of law, the burden shifts to the nonmovant to raise a genuine, material fact issue sufficient to defeat summary judgment.⁵⁶ A fact is material when it "affects the ultimate outcome of the suit under the governing law."⁵⁷ "A material fact issue is 'genuine' only if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could find the fact in favor of the nonmoving party."⁵⁸

In deciding whether there is a disputed fact issue, the court considers all the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, "crediting evidence favorable to [the nonmovant] if reasonable jurors could, and disregarding contrary evidence unless reasonable jurors could not."⁵⁹ The evidence raises a genuine issue of fact if "reasonable and fair-minded jurors could differ in their conclusions in light of all" the summary judgment evidence.⁶⁰

3. No-Evidence Motion for Summary Judgment. "A no-evidence summary judgment is essentially a pretrial directed verdict."⁶¹ Rule 166a(i), which provides for no-evidence summary judgments, requires much less from the movant than when moving for a traditional summary judgment.⁶² Under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 166a(i), "a party may move for summary judgment on the ground that there is no evidence of one or more essential elements of a claim or defense on which an adverse party would have the burden of proof at trial.”⁶³ The movant need not produce any evidence supporting its no-evidence motion.⁶⁴ Instead, the mere filing of a proper motion shifts the burden to the nonmovant to come forward with enough evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact.⁶⁵ If the nonmovant does not, the court must grant the motion.⁶⁶

While it need not be detailed, the no-evidence summary judgment motion must meet certain requirements. First, the movant must identify the grounds for the motion.⁶⁷ The motion also must state the elements for which there is no evidence.⁶⁸ A defendant’s motion should state the elements of the plaintiff’s cause of action and specifically challenge the evidentiary support for an element of that claim.⁶⁹ For example, in a negligence case, it is sufficient to state that there is no evidence of duty, breach, or causation.⁷⁰

Second, the motion cannot be conclusory or generally allege that there is no evidence to support the claims.⁷¹ In other words, a motion that merely states that there is no evidence to support the other party’s claim is insufficient. For example, a no-evidence motion is too general if it states: “[T]here is absolutely no evidence to support [plaintiff’s] assertions that [defendant] committed a wrongful foreclosure”⁷² The underlying purpose of the requirement that the motion be specific, not conclusory, is to provide the nonmovant “with adequate information for opposing the motion, and to define the issues.”⁷³ In Timpte Industries, Inc. v. Gish, the supreme court applied a “fair notice” standard to determine whether a motion for no-evidence summary judgment was sufficient.⁷⁴ The court allowed that the degree of specificity required depends on the case. It determined that a motion was sufficient that stated that “[p]laintiff has presented no evidence of a design defect which was a producing cause of his personal injury” and included a conclusion that essentially repeated the statement of this element with little additional information.⁷⁵ The court also noted that such a motion might be insufficient in a complex products or design defect case.⁷⁶

If a no-evidence motion for summary judgment is conclusory, general, or does not state the elements for which there is no evidence, the motion is legally insufficient and may be challenged for the first time on appeal.⁷⁷

While no evidence need be attached to a no-evidence motion for summary judgment, in some instances it may be advisable to do so in light of summary judgment cases construing City of Keller v. Wilson.⁷⁸ In City of Keller, the court determined that “[t]he standards for taking any case from the jury should be the same, no matter what motion is used [for summary judgment].”⁷⁹ The court noted that appellate courts “do not disregard the evidence supporting the motion.”⁸⁰ But it added that “although a reviewing court must consider all the summary judgment evidence on file, in some cases that review will effectively be restricted to the evidence contrary to the motion.”⁸¹ City of Keller has been construed to mean that the appellate court reviewing a summary judgment “must consider whether reasonable and fair-minded jurors could differ in their conclusions in light of all of the evidence presented.”⁸²

4. Combined Traditional and No-Evidence Motions for Summary Judgment. Traditional summary judgment motions under Rules 166a(a) or (b) may be combined with a Rule 166a(i) no-evidence motion.⁸³ In moving for (or responding to) a summary judgment, it is important to distinguish between the two types of summary judgments because different burdens of proof and standards of review apply and the standards for timing of the motion are different.⁸⁴ The fact that a movant attaches evidence to its motion based on subsection (a) or (b) does not foreclose it from also asserting that there is no evidence of a particular element.⁸⁵ In fact, as noted above, it may be advisable.⁸⁶ The court may also treat it as a traditional motion for summary judgment under subsection (a) or (b).

The supreme court endorses the use of headings to delineate the basis for summary judgment but does not require it.⁸⁷ “If a motion clearly sets forth its grounds and otherwise meets Rule 166a’s requirements, it is sufficient.”⁸⁸ Nonetheless, using headings makes the motion easier to follow and understand and is good advocacy.

B. Pleadings

The movant should insure that the grounds for the motion for summary judgment are supported by pleadings. Rule 166a(c) provides that the trial court should render summary judgment based on pleadings on file at the time of the hearing.⁸⁹ Where there is no live pleading urging a cause of action, there can be no summary judgment.⁹⁰

1. Amended Pleadings. Unless it violates a discovery plan deadline, a party may file an amended pleading after it files its summary judgment motion or response.⁹¹ A summary judgment proceeding is considered a “trial” with respect to filing amended pleadings according to Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 63.⁹² Thus, a party should file an amended answer as soon as possible and no later than seven days before the summary judgment hearing.⁹³ If filed outside the seven-day period, no leave to file amended pleadings is necessary.⁹⁴ In computing the seven-day period, the day the party files the amended pleading is not counted, but the day of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment is counted.⁹⁵

Leave of court must be obtained to file amended pleadings within seven days of the date of the summary judgment hearing.⁹⁶ If the motion for leave is filed within seven days of the hearing, the appellate court presumes leave was granted if “(1) the summary judgment states that all pleadings were considered, (2) the record does not indicate that an amended pleading was not considered, and (3) the opposing party does not show surprise.”⁹⁷ “To properly preserve a complaint regarding a pleading which has been filed within seven days of trial, ‘the complaining party must demonstrate surprise and request a continuance.’”⁹⁸

which the summary judgment sprang.”⁹⁹ Once the hearing date on the motion for summary judgment has passed, a party may file an amended pleading before the court signs a judgment only if it secures a written order granting leave to file.¹⁰⁰ If a nonmovant does not obtain the trial court’s written permission to amend its pleadings after the hearing date, the movant need not amend or supplement its motion for summary judgment to address those claims.¹⁰¹ The court cannot grant a motion to amend the pleadings once it signs an order granting summary judgment.¹⁰²

If the plaintiff amends the petition after being served with a motion for summary judgment, the defendant must file an amended or supplemental motion for summary judgment to address the newly pleaded cause of action.¹⁰³ Amending the motion is equally necessary for no-evidence summary judgments. If the plaintiff amends its petition adding new causes of action not addressed by the defendant’s no-evidence motion for summary judgment, the defendant must file an amended motion for summary judgment identifying the elements of the newly pled theories for which there is no evidence. Otherwise, summary judgment on the entirety of the plaintiff’s case will be improper, because the no-evidence motion fails to address all of the plaintiff’s theories of liability.¹⁰⁴ However, if an amended petition only “reiterates the same essential elements in another fashion,” then the original motion for summary judgment will cover the new variations.¹⁰⁵ Similarly, “[i]f a motion for summary judgment is sufficiently broad to encompass later-filed claims, the movant need not amend [the] motion.”¹⁰⁶ Also, “when a ground asserted in a motion for summary judgment conclusively negates a common element of the newly and previously pleaded claims,” summary judgment may be proper.¹⁰⁷

In cases with court-ordered discovery plans, the court may set the deadline for amended pleadings before the close of the discovery period.¹⁰⁸ In those instances, movants who wait to move for summary judgment until after the time expires for pleading amendments will not have to amend the summary judgment motion to address amended pleadings filed beyond the deadline without leave of court.

2. Unpleaded Claims or Defenses. Unpleaded claims or defenses may form the basis for summary judgment if the nonmovant does not object.¹⁰⁹ Specifically, the Texas Supreme Court has held:

[A]n unpleaded affirmative defense may . . . serve as the basis for a summary judgment when it is raised in the summary judgment motion, and the opposing party does not object to the lack of a [Texas Rule of Civil Procedure] 94 pleading in either its written response or before the rendition of judgment.¹¹⁰

Based on the same reasoning, the Eastland Court of Appeals determined that even though the plaintiff failed to plead the discovery rule, summary judgment was precluded when the defendant did not address it after the plaintiff raised it in response to its motion for summary judgment.¹¹¹ The court held that “when a non-movant relies on an unpleaded affirmative defense or an unpleaded matter constituting a confession and avoidance,”¹¹² the movant must object to defeat a motion for summary judgment, otherwise, the issue will be tried by consent.¹¹³

If the nonmovant does object to the lack of an unpleaded claim or defense, the movant must amend to conform its pleadings to the motion.¹¹⁴

3. Pleading Deficiencies and Special Exceptions. Summary judgment motions are not a proper vehicle to attack pleading deficiencies.¹¹⁵ Texas has no equivalent to a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.¹¹⁶ “A summary judgment should not be based on a pleading deficiency that could be cured by amendment.”¹¹⁷ However, a nonmovant must raise a complaint that summary judgment was granted without opportunity to amend or it is waived.¹¹⁸

a. Special Exceptions. If the nonmovant seeks to challenge the plaintiff’s failure to state a cause of action, filing special exceptions is the appropriate method to attack that failure.¹¹⁹ The purpose of special exceptions is to compel clarification of pleadings when the pleadings are not clear or sufficiently specific or fail to plead a cause of action.¹²⁰ Special exceptions allow the nonmovant an opportunity to amend before dismissal.¹²¹ There is no general demurrer in Texas.¹²² If the court determines the petition is defective, the “court must give the pleader an opportunity to amend his pleadings prior to granting summary judgment or dismissing the case.”¹²³ In certain circumstances, a trial court may dismiss a claim after sustaining special exceptions. For example, in Baylor University v. Sonnichsen, the supreme court determined that because the plaintiff could not have corrected the problem (there was no mutual agreement), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the defendant’s special exceptions and dismissing his breach of contract claim.¹²⁴

Nonetheless, special exceptions can identify and set up conditions to make a case subject to summary judgment disposition. Subject to challenges to jurisdiction and venue, a party should file special exceptions identifying and objecting to non-jurisdictional defects apparent on the face of the opponent’s pleadings.¹²⁵ If identification of the defect depends on information extrinsic to the pleadings themselves, special exceptions are not appropriate.¹²⁶ Special exceptions must be directed at the plaintiff’s live pleadings.¹²⁷

Special exceptions are also the method to force a movant for summary judgment to clarify its position if its motion for summary judgment is unclear or ambiguous. To complain that summary judgment grounds are unclear, a nonmovant must pecially except to the motion.¹²⁸ If the motion fails to state grounds or states some grounds but not others, the nonmovant should use these defects as a means to defeat the summary judgment on the merits, not to identify them by special exceptions and thereby prompting the movant to cure them.

b. Effect of Amendment and Failure to Amend. A motion for summary judgment should not be based on a pleading deficiency that could be cured by amendment (subject to a special exception). If the trial court sustains the special exceptions, the offending party may replead or the party may elect to stand on the pleadings and test the trial court's order on appeal.¹²⁹ The right to amend is absolute.¹³⁰ Yet, if the opportunity to amend is given and no amendment is made or instead a further defective pleading is filed, then summary judgment may be proper.¹³¹ If a pleading deficiency is a type that cannot be cured by an amendment, then a special exception is unnecessary and summary judgment is proper if the facts alleged "establish the absence of a right of action or [create] an insuperable barrier to a right of recovery."¹³²

The review of summary judgment differs when based on the failure of a party to state a claim after either special exceptions or an amendment because review focuses on the pleadings of the nonmovant.¹³³ Review of the sufficiency of the amended pleadings is de novo.¹³⁴ The appellate court must take "all allegations, facts, and inferences in the pleadings as true and view[] them in a light most favorable to the pleader."¹³⁵ The court will reverse the motion for summary judgment if the pleadings, liberally construed, support recovery under any legal theory.¹³⁶ On the other hand, “[t]he reviewing court will affirm the summary judgment only if the pleadings are legally insufficient.”¹³⁷

If the nonmovant does not object to the absence of special exceptions and the lack of the opportunity to amend, its complaint is waived.¹³⁸

C. Time for Filing Motion for Summary Judgment

The timing of filing a motion for summary judgment depends on whether it is a traditional motion for summary judgment or a no-evidence summary judgment.

1. Traditional Summary Judgment. Rule 166a(a) provides that the party seeking affirmative relief in a lawsuit may file a traditional motion for summary judgment at any time after the adverse party answers the suit.¹³⁹ A summary judgment may not be granted for a plaintiff against a defendant who has no answer on file.¹⁴⁰ A defendant, however, may file a motion for summary judgment at any time,¹⁴¹ even before answering the lawsuit.¹⁴²

Nonetheless, seldom is a motion for summary judgment appropriate immediately after the defendant has answered. In fact, Rule 166a(g) provides that the court “may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to Am., 748 S.W.2d 210, 213 (Tex. 1988) (concluding that the reviewing court will accept as true all factual allegations in the plaintiff’s petition to determine whether the petition states a factual basis for plaintiff’s claim); Havens v. Tomball Cmty. Hosp., 793 S.W.2d 690, 691 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1990, writ denied) (stating that “the court must take as true every allegation of the pleading against which the motion is directed”).

136. Gross v. Davies, 882 S.W.2d 452, 454 (Tex. Mallard & Mallard, Inc.*, 817 S.W.2d 90, 93 (Tex. be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.”¹⁴³ Examples of proper early-filed motions for summary judgment would be when the case hinges exclusively on the interpretation of a statute, the construction of an unambiguous contract, or application of the statute of limitations when the discovery rule does not apply. Generally, the nonmovant will have grounds for a continuance to conduct some discovery.¹⁴⁴

2. No-Evidence Motion for Summary Judgment. The proper timing of a no-evidence motion for summary judgment is more complicated than that for a traditional motion for summary judgment. Before a no-evidence summary judgment can be filed, there must be an “adequate time for discovery.”¹⁴⁵ “The rule does not require that discovery must have been completed, only that there was ‘adequate time’” for discovery.¹⁴⁶ Specifically, the rule provides in relevant part:

(i) No-Evidence Motion. After adequate time for discovery, a party without presenting summary judgment evidence may move for summary judgment on the ground that there is no evidence of one or more essential elements of a claim or defense on which an adverse party would have the burden of proof at trial.¹⁴⁷

The “Notes and Comments” addendum to the rule, which was promulgated in 1997, offers guidance for cases with discovery orders. It provides that “[a] discovery period set by pretrial order should be adequate opportunity for discovery unless there is a showing to the contrary, and ordinarily a motion under paragraph (i) would be permitted after the period but not before.”¹⁴⁸

The addendum to the rule made no mention of how to proceed in the absence of a pretrial order. The revised discovery rules filled that gap because all cases now have a rule- or court-imposed discovery plan with discovery periods.¹⁴⁹ Rule 190 provides three discovery control plans, each of which has a “discovery period” for all civil cases.¹⁵⁰ Therefore, an “adequate time for discovery” may be measured against the “discovery period” assigned to a given case. The comment to Rule 166a(i) covers what now is called a “Level 3” case, which has a court-imposed discovery plan.¹⁵¹ Levels 1 and 2 have rule-imposed discovery periods.¹⁵² Thus, if the no-evidence motion for summary judgment is filed after the expiration of the discovery periods, presumptively there will have been an adequate time for discovery.

For Level 1 cases, an adequate time for discovery would occur thirty days before trial.¹⁵³ The practical effect of this cutoff date is that the case has progressed so far, and the dollars sought are so relatively small, that many defendants will forego filing a no-evidence motion for summary judgment in the last thirty days before trial. Also, it will be difficult to get the trial court to rule on the motion for summary judgment in the limited time before trial. For Level 2 cases, an adequate time for discovery would be the discovery cutoff of thirty days before the date set for trial, or nine months after the first oral deposition is taken or the answers to the first written discovery are due, whichever is earlier.¹⁵⁴ In Level 2 family cases, the nonmovant responding to a motion for summary judgment filed thirty days before trial would have had adequate time for discovery.¹⁵⁵ For Level 3 cases, the close of discovery under the court-ordered discovery control plan determines the date after which an adequate time for discovery has passed.¹⁵⁶

The timing restriction is not absolute. Movants on no-evidence summary judgments may properly file the motion before the expiration of the discovery period. The ability to file a no-evidence motion for summary judgment before the close of discovery supports judicial economy arguments; the presumption against the early filing of motions for summary judgment supports the right to a certain discovery window to allow a party to secure sufficient evidence to demonstrate the existence of a fact issue.

In appropriate cases, a movant could show an adequate time for discovery has passed, even though the discovery period has not expired, by convincing the court that the nonmovant’s claimed need for discovery is unfounded.¹⁵⁷ The nonmovant opposing an early-filed no-evidence motion for summary judgment should attempt to have it denied as premature by convincing the court that remaining discovery is likely to lead to controverting evidence and that, in any event, he or she is entitled to the additional time under the discovery plan.

Even if the no-evidence motion for summary judgment is filed after the close of discovery,¹⁵⁸ Rule 190.5 may provide a basis for a request for continuance of the motion for summary judgment. Rule 190.5 allows for a continuance in obtaining additional discovery after the close of the discovery period. When a nonmovant contends that he or she has not had an adequate time for discovery, he or she must file an affidavit or a verified motion for continuance explaining the need for further discovery.¹⁵⁹ The court may deny the motion for summary judgment, continue the hearing to allow additional discovery, or “make such other order as is just.”¹⁶⁰

The “adequate time for discovery” standard applies only to no-evidence summary judgments.¹⁶¹

D. Deadlines for Filing Motion for Summary Judgment

A motion for summary judgment shall be filed and served at least twenty-one days before the time specified for the hearing on the summary judgment.¹⁶² If different parties on the same side of the lawsuit file separate summary judgment motions, each movant should comply with the notice provisions of the rule.¹⁶³ Parties may alter the deadlines for filing summary judgment motions by Rule 11 agreement.¹⁶⁴ Periods governing summary judgment procedures are counted in the same manner as for other procedural rules.¹⁶⁵ The day of service of a motion for summary judgment is not to be included in computing the minimum twenty-one-day notice for hearing.¹⁶⁶ However, the day of hearing is included in the computation.¹⁶⁷ If the motion is served by mail, three days are added to the twenty-one-day notice period required prior to the hearing.¹⁶⁸ Thus, a “hearing on a motion for summary judgment may be set as early as the 21st day after the motion is served, or the 24th day if the motion is served by mail.”¹⁶⁹

The twenty-one-day requirement is strictly construed by the courts and should be carefully followed. “Summary judgment evidence may be filed late, but only with leave of court.”¹⁷⁰ The party filing the late evidence must obtain a written order granting leave to file.¹⁷¹ Rule 166a(c) authorizes the court to accept materials filed after the hearing so long as those materials are filed before judgment.¹⁷² If a summary judgment hearing is reset, the twenty-one-day requirement does not apply to the resetting.¹⁷³ The nonmovant need only be given a reasonable time in which to prepare and file a response.¹⁷⁴ “Reasonable notice . . . means at least seven days before the hearing on the motion [for summary judgment] because a nonmovant may only file a response to a motion for summary judgment not later than seven days prior to the date of the hearing”¹⁷⁵

A party waives its challenge for failure to receive twenty-one days’ notice if that party “received notice of the hearing, appeared at it, filed no controverting affidavit, and did not ask for a continuance.”¹⁷⁶ “An allegation that a party received less notice than required by statute does not present a jurisdictional question and therefore may not be raised for the first time on appeal.”¹⁷⁷ It is error for the trial judge to grant a summary judgment without notice of the setting.¹⁷⁸ However, for the error to be reversible, the nonmovant must show harm.¹⁷⁹

No additional notice is required for the trial court to rehear a previously denied motion for summary judgment.¹⁸⁰

E. Deadlines for Response

Rule 166a(c) provides that “[e]xcept on leave of court, the adverse party, not later than seven days prior to the day of hearing may file and serve opposing affidavits or other written response.”¹⁸¹ The three-day rule for mailing does not apply to the response. A response is timely if it is mailed seven days before the hearing date.¹⁸² If the trial court imposes a shorter deadline to file a response, the nonmovant must object to preserve that error for appeal.¹⁸³ The seven-day rule applies equally to responses to cross-motions for summary judgment.¹⁸⁴ Any special exception due to a lack of clarity or ambiguity in the motion for summary judgment is likewise subject to the seven-day deadline.¹⁸⁵ Amended pleadings may be filed without leave of court up to seven days before the hearing.¹⁸⁶

Courts may allow a late response.¹⁸⁷ The nonmovant must obtain leave of court to file a late response.¹⁸⁸ Refusal to permit late filing is discretionary.¹⁸⁹ The standard for allowing a late-filed summary judgment is a showing of good cause and no undue prejudice.¹⁹⁰ If a court allows late filing of a response to a motion for summary judgment, the court “must affirmatively indicate in the record acceptance of the late filing.”¹⁹¹ The affirmative indication may be by separate order, by recitation in the summary judgment itself, or an oral ruling contained in the reporter’s record of the summary judgment hearing.¹⁹² A Rule 11 agreement¹⁹³ “may alter the deadline for filing a response.”¹⁹⁴ One court has determined that a docket entry is sufficient to show leave was granted.¹⁹⁵ Nonetheless, obtaining a separate order or having the summary judgment order reflect permission is advisable. Although an oral order recorded in a reporter's record (formerly "statement of facts") from the hearing may not be sufficient, one court has held that it was sufficient.¹⁹⁶ In the absence of such indication, the appellate court will presume that the judge refused the late filing, even if the response appears as part of the appellate transcript.¹⁹⁷

F. Movant's Reply

Aside from the advocacy benefits to filing a reply, the movant must file a reply if he or she intends to object to the nonmovant's evidence. The reply should make any challenges to the nonmovant's summary judgment evidence.¹⁹⁸ Rule 166a does not specify when the movant's reply to the nonmovant's response should be filed. The limited case law that exists indicates that the movant may file a reply up until the day of the hearing.¹⁹⁹ For example, Reynolds v. Murphy holds that "a movant's objections to the competency of a nonmovant's evidence that are filed the day of the hearing are not untimely and may be considered and ruled upon by the trial court."²⁰⁰ Local rules may govern the timing of the reply.²⁰¹ Any special exception by the movant concerning vagueness or ambiguity in the nonmovant's response must be made at least three days before the hearing.²⁰² The seven-day limit before submission in which a nonmovant may submit summary judgment evidence does not apply to the movant's reply.²⁰³

One court held that the record need not reflect receipt of notice by the nonmovant.²¹¹ Constructive notice is imputed when the evidence indicates “that the intended recipient engaged in instances of selective acceptance/refusal of certified mail relating to the case.”²¹²

To preserve a complaint of inadequate notice, a party must object and ask for a continuance. Otherwise, a party may waive the twenty-one-day notice requirement.²¹³ For example, in Davis v. Davis, two parties filed separate motions for summary judgment directed against the appellant.²¹⁴ One motion gave the appellant twenty-one days’ notice, but the other motion did not.²¹⁵ The trial court considered both motions simultaneously.²¹⁶ The appellate court found that the appellant waived any objection to the inadequacy of the notice period because he participated in the hearing without objection and failed to ask for a continuance, rehearing, or new trial.²¹⁷ “To hold otherwise would allow a party who participated in the hearing to lie behind the log until after the summary judgment is granted and then raise the complaint of late notice for the first time in a post-trial motion.”²¹⁸

Conversely, if a party is not given notice of the hearing or “is deprived of its right to seek leave to file additional affidavits or other written response, . . . it may preserve error in a post-trial motion.”²¹⁹ For example, in Tivoli Corp. v. Jewelers Mutual Insurance Co., a motion for new trial was sufficient to preserve error because the trial judge signed the summary judgment before the date set for submission and the nonmovant had no opportunity to object.²²⁰

If the motion is mailed, a party is allowed an additional three days under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 21a, and the hearing may not be held before twenty-four days have elapsed.²²¹ In Chadderdon v. Blaschke, the court held that even though a motion for summary judgment was filed two months before the hearing on the motion, the fact that a notice of hearing was mailed twenty-one days before the hearing was reversible error, because the notice of hearing was not mailed twenty-four days in advance.²²²

Rule 21a also applies to service by fax.²²³ Thus, the notice of hearing must be faxed twenty-four days before the hearing. If fax service is used, the documents must be sent and received before 5:00 p.m. or they will be deemed served on the following day.²²⁴

Time requirements for service may be altered by agreement of the parties²²⁵ and by court order.²²⁶

H. Continuances

motion [for summary judgment] that he cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify his opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.²²⁷

Rule 166a(i) indirectly provides the basis for a continuance of a no-evidence summary judgment when it authorizes the granting of a no-evidence summary judgment only “[a]fter adequate time for discovery.”²²⁸

Thus, when a nonmovant “contends that it has not had an adequate opportunity for discovery before a summary judgment hearing, it must file either an affidavit explaining the need for further discovery or a verified motion for continuance.”²²⁹ Failure to do so waives the contention on appeal that the nonmovant did not have an adequate time for discovery.²³⁰ As noted earlier, Rule 166a(g) specifically provides that the trial court may deny the motion for summary judgment, continue the hearing to allow additional discovery, or “make such other order as is just.”²³¹

Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 166a(b) provides that a defending party may move for traditional summary judgment at any time.²³² Thus, discovery deadlines have no impact on a trial court’s decision to deny a motion for continuance based on inadequate time for discovery and to proceed to a hearing on the merits of a motion for traditional summary judgment.²³³ It is not mandatory for the trial court to grant a continuance simply because it is uncontroverted and in proper form.²³⁴ denial of a motion for continuance based on a lack of time to prepare is not generally an abuse of discretion,²³⁵ although sympathetic trial judges frequently grant them. When reviewing a trial court's order denying a motion for continuance, the courts consider on a case-by-case basis whether the trial court committed a clear abuse of discretion.²³⁶ A trial court "abuses its discretion when it reaches a decision so arbitrary and unreasonable as to amount to a clear and prejudicial error of law."²³⁷

2. Factors Considered in Granting Continuances. In determining whether a trial court abuses its discretion in denying a motion for continuance based on the need for additional discovery, the supreme court has considered the following non-exclusive factors: "the length of time the case has been on file, the materiality and purpose of the discovery sought, and whether the party seeking the continuance has exercised due diligence to obtain the discovery sought."²³⁸

In Thomson v. Norton, the appellate court found no abuse of discretion when the trial court refused to grant a continuance to a newly appointed attorney who desired additional time to become familiar with the law and facts in the case.²³⁹ The court supported its decision on the grounds that the client was represented by a lawyer at all times before the hearing.²⁴⁰

On the other hand, in Verkin v. Southwest Center One, Ltd., the appellate court found abuse of discretion when the trial court refused to grant a motion for continuance in a case that had been on file less than three months, when the motion stated sufficient good cause, was uncontroverted, and was the first motion for continuance.²⁴¹

Nonmovants seeking additional time for discovery should “convince the court that the requested discovery is more than a ‘fishing’ expedition, is likely to lead to controverting evidence, and was not reasonably available beforehand despite [the nonmovant’s] diligence.”²⁴² Conclusory allegations will not support a request for continuance.²⁴³ Nonmovants must state what specific depositions or discovery products are material and show why they are material.²⁴⁴ The party moving for summary judgment, when appropriate, should try to convince the court that the nonmovant’s discovery efforts are simply a delay tactic. For example, the motion may be based on incontrovertible facts, involve pure questions of law, or request discovery that relates to immaterial matters.²⁴⁵

The no-evidence summary judgment rule specifically provides that a motion for summary judgment can be filed only “[a]fter adequate time for discovery.”²⁴⁶ Nonmovants will argue in their motions for continuance that if they have more time, they will be able to produce enough evidence to defeat the motion. “Whether a non-movant has had adequate time for discovery . . . is ‘case specific.’”²⁴⁷ The factors the courts look to for no-evidence summary judgment continuances, not surprisingly, mirror those articulated for traditional summary judgments. “[T]here is no . . . minimum amount of time that a case must be pending before a trial court may entertain a no-evidence summary judgment motion.”²⁴⁸ “The amount of time necessary to constitute ‘adequate time’ depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.”²⁴⁹ time the no-evidence motion has been on file, whether the movant has requested stricter time deadlines for discovery, the amount of discovery that has already taken place, and whether the discovery deadlines that are in place are specific or vague.”²⁵⁰

A nonmovant in a no-evidence summary judgment may argue that it is entitled to the entire period allowed by the rule or court-imposed discovery deadlines. Yet, courts have held that the court- or rule-imposed discovery cutoff does not control the decision of whether an adequate time for discovery has elapsed.²⁵¹ For traditional summary judgment motions, the discovery deadline generally has no impact on the trial court’s decision to grant a summary judgment.²⁵²

In one mass tort case, the court of appeals held that the plaintiffs had enjoyed adequate time for discovery when the case had been pending for ten years, and the plaintiffs had had almost a year after the filing of the no-evidence motion to conduct additional discovery.²⁵³ In another case, which included a sixteen-month bankruptcy stay, the court noted that factoring in the bankruptcy stay, a year remained for discovery, and the stay did not prevent the plaintiff from continuing to develop his case for those documents already in his possession.²⁵⁴ In yet another case, the court held that two years and four months was an adequate time for discovery; the plaintiff had adequate time to conduct discovery on a fraud claim because the evidence necessary to defeat the no-evidence motion—reliance and damages—“is the sort of evidence that should be immediately available to a plaintiff.”²⁵⁵

In Ford Motor Co. v. Castillo, the supreme court determined that neither affidavits nor a verified motion for continuance were necessary when the trial court refused to allow Ford to conduct any discovery.²⁵⁶ In Castillo, the trial court granted a motion for summary judgment on the plaintiff's breach of contract claim following a claim of breach of settlement in a products liability case. The supreme court determined that the trial court abused its discretion by denying Ford the right to conduct discovery.²⁵⁷

If the court grants a continuance, the minimum twenty-one-day period notice requirement for submission or hearing does not begin again because the twenty-one-day period is measured from the original filing day.²⁵⁸

I. Hearing

Notice of a summary judgment hearing must be in writing.²⁵⁹ While notice of a hearing is required, an oral hearing is not.²⁶⁰ The day of submission of a motion for summary judgment has the same meaning as the day of hearing.²⁶¹ A hearing or submission date must be set because the time limits for responding are keyed to the hearing or submission date. Unless there is a hearing or submission date, the nonmovant cannot calculate its response due date, and its due process rights are violated.²⁶²

A motion for summary judgment is submitted on written evidence. Thus, a hearing on motion for summary judgment is a review of the written motion, response, reply, if any, and attached evidence.²⁶³

Ordinarily, no oral testimony will be allowed at the hearing on a motion for summary judgment.²⁶⁴ Furthermore, the court may not consider, at the hearing, oral objections to summary judgment evidence that are not a part of the properly filed, written summary judgment pleadings.²⁶⁵ However, the El Paso Court of Appeals considered the reporter's record of the summary judgment hearing to determine that the trial court did not rule on written evidentiary objections.²⁶⁶

When a trial court is faced with "overlapping and intermingling" motions for summary judgment and other matters that allow oral testimony, the trial court should conduct separate hearings.²⁶⁷ At the summary judgment hearing, counsel should strenuously oppose any attempt to use oral testimony to deviate from the written documents on file, and the court should neither permit nor consider such testimony.²⁶⁸ Parties may restrict or expand the issues "expressly presented" in writing if the change meets the requirements of Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 11.²⁶⁹ "An oral waiver or agreement made in open court satisfies [R]ule 11 if it is described in the judgment or an order of the court."²⁷⁰ In Clement v. City of Plano, the court noted that "the order granting the motion for summary judgment [did] not reflect any agreement Therefore, counsel's statements at the hearing, standing alone, did not amount to a [R]ule 11 exception and did not constitute a narrowing of the issues."²⁷¹

The summary judgment hearing generally need not be transcribed. As the court noted in El Paso Associates, Ltd. v. J.R. Thurman & Co., to "permit 'issues' to be presented orally would encourage parties to request that a court reporter record summary judgment hearings, a practice neither necessary, nor appropriate to the purposes of such hearing.”²⁷² Considering the conflicts among the courts of appeals regarding “implied” rulings as summary judgment evidence,²⁷³ it may be appropriate to request a record if the court makes rulings on the evidence or proceedings during the hearing.

After the hearing or submission, the next step is for the court to rule on the motion. The court may act as soon as the date of submission or as late as never. There is generally no procedure for a party to compel the court to rule on a pending motion for summary judgment.²⁷⁴ Mandamus relief is strictly limited. If the trial judge fails to rule, “even though the delay in ruling on the motion causes expense and inconvenience to the litigants, mandamus is not available to compel the trial judge to rule on the pending motion for summary judgment.”²⁷⁵

J. The Judgment

The advantage of obtaining an order from the trial court specifying the basis for the summary judgment—usually a fruitless endeavor anyway—has been removed. Formerly, when a summary judgment order stated the specific grounds upon which it was granted, a party appealing from such order need have shown only that the specific grounds to which the order referred were insufficient to support the order.²⁷⁶ If any theory advanced in a motion for summary judgment supports the granting of summary judgment, a court of appeals may affirm regardless of whether the trial court specified the grounds on which it relied.²⁷⁷ The court of appeals should consider all the grounds on which the trial court rules and may consider all the grounds the trial court does not rule upon.²⁷⁸ Nonetheless, numerous opinions continue to recite that their consideration of all issues is based on the fact that the trial court did not specify its reason for its ruling, including opinions issued by the Texas Supreme Court.²⁷⁹

To ensure the trial court's intent to make a judgment final and appealable, the supreme court suggests the inclusion of the following language in the judgment: "This judgment finally disposes of all parties and all claims and is appealable."²⁸⁰ The language is not mandatory.

Occasionally, a trial judge will receive a request to file findings of fact and conclusions of law after the granting of a motion for summary judgment.²⁸¹ This request should be denied.²⁸² Neither findings of fact nor conclusions of law are proper on a partial summary judgment even though the court prepares them in the later-trying bench trial. The reason findings of fact and conclusions of law have no place in summary judgment practice is that the judge has no factual disputes to resolve. Unlike findings of fact and conclusions of law requested in proper circumstances, a request for them will not extend the appellate timetable in a summary judgment case.²⁸³

A plaintiff may take a nonsuit at any time before the trial court grants a motion for summary judgment.²⁸⁴ However, as a dispositive motion, a partial summary judgment survives a nonsuit.²⁸⁵

K. Partial Summary Judgments

Motions for partial summary judgment are used to dispose of some claims or some parties. While they present certain opportunities, they also can give rise to problems. One trap arises when a summary judgment granted for one defendant becomes final even though it does not specifically incorporate a partial summary judgment granted in favor of the only other defendant.²⁸⁶ An order granting summary judgment concerning a claim but not disposing of all issues presented in a counterclaim is interlocutory.²⁸⁷

A partial judgment should refer to those specific issues addressed by the partial judgment. A partial summary judgment can be made final by requesting a severance of the issues or parties dismissed by the motion for partial summary judgment from those issues or parties remaining.²⁸⁸ “A severance splits a single suit into two or more independent actions, each action resulting in an appealable final judgment.”²⁸⁹ “Severance of claims under the Texas Rules of Civil Procedure rests within the sound discretion of the trial court.”²⁹⁰

Severance of a partial summary judgment does not automatically result in a final, appealable order. All of the parties and issues in the severed part of the case must be disposed of. In Diversified Financial Systems, Inc. v. Hill, Heard, O’Neal, Gilstrap & Goetz, P.C., the severance order stated that the separate action should “proceed as such to final judgment or other disposition in this Court.”²⁹¹ The supreme court determined the order clearly precluded a final judgment until the later judgment was signed.²⁹²

A trial court may not withdraw a partial summary judgment after the close of evidence in such a manner that the party is precluded from presenting the issues decided in the partial summary judgment.²⁹³ A partial summary judgment survives a nonsuit.²⁹⁴ The nonsuit results in a dismissal with prejudice as to the issues decided in the partial summary judgment.²⁹⁵ On appeal, a partial summary judgment incorporated into a final judgment is reviewed under the applicable summary judgment standard of review.²⁹⁶

L. Motions for Rehearing

Occasionally, a party in a summary judgment proceeding will file a motion for rehearing or new trial following the granting of a motion for summary judgment.²⁹⁷ A motion for new trial is unnecessary to preserve complaints directed at the summary judgment “because a motion for new trial is not a prerequisite for an appeal of a summary judgment proceeding.”²⁹⁸ Unless the movant on rehearing shows that the evidence “could not have been discovered through due diligence prior to the ruling on a summary judgment motion,” additional evidence may not be considered on rehearing.²⁹⁹

However, a motion for new trial is necessary to preserve error concerning complaints lost due to physical absence from the summary judgment hearing.³⁰⁰ Another reason to file a motion for new trial is to extend appellate timetables. Just as for an appeal from a jury trial, a motion for new trial following a grant of summary judgment extends appellate timetables.³⁰¹ While not technically a request for a new trial, safe practice is to title a motion for rehearing as a “Request for Rehearing and Motion for New Trial” so that there is no issue concerning whether the pleading is sufficient to extend the timetables.

302. Under Craddock, the trial court abuses its discretion if it denies a motion for a new trial after a default judgment if the nonmovant establishes:

apply to summary judgment proceedings in so-called default summary judgments where the nonmovant fails to respond to the motion when it had the opportunity to seek a continuance or obtain permission to file a late response.³⁰³ In Carpenter v. Cimarron Hydrocarbons Corp., the supreme court emphasized that it was not deciding whether Craddock would apply when the “nonmovant discovers its mistake after the summary-judgment hearing or rendition of judgment.”³⁰⁴ Then, in Wheeler v. Green, the supreme court considered a case in which deemed admissions formed the basis for a summary judgment and were challenged first in a motion for new trial.³⁰⁵ The court determined that “when a party uses deemed admissions to [attempt] to preclude presentation of the merits of a case, the same due-process concerns arise,” as in merits-preclusive sanctions.³⁰⁶ The court held that under the facts in that case, the trial court should have granted a motion for new trial and allowed the deemed admissions to be withdrawn.³⁰⁷

Additionally, in Nickerson v. E.I.L. Instruments, Inc., the Houston First Court of Appeals held that the trial court’s action in granting the nonmovant’s motion for new trial, immediately reconsidering the motion for summary judgment, and again granting judgment, could not cure a defect in notice of the hearing.³⁰⁸ Once the motion for new trial was granted, the nonmovant should have been given reasonable notice of the hearing.³⁰⁹ The court decided that seven days’ notice of the hearing after granting a motion for new trial was reasonable notice.³¹⁰

If a court denies a summary judgment motion, it has the authority to reconsider and grant a motion for summary judgment,³¹¹ or change or modify the original order.³¹²

M. Sanctions

A motion for summary judgment asserting that there is no genuine issue of material fact is not groundless merely by the filing of a response that raises an issue of fact.³¹³ This tenet is true “even if the response was or could have been anticipated by the movant.”³¹⁴ Also, denial of a summary judgment alone is not grounds for sanctions.³¹⁵

Rule 166a has its own particular sanctions provision concerning affidavits filed in bad faith. If a trial court concludes that an affidavit submitted with a motion for summary judgment was presented “in bad faith or solely for the purpose of delay,” the court may impose sanctions on the party employing the offending affidavits.³¹⁶ Such sanctions include the reasonable expenses incurred by the other party, including attorney’s fees, as a result of the filing of the affidavits.³¹⁷ Sanctions for submitting affidavits in bad faith may also include holding an offending party or attorney in contempt.³¹⁸ The comment to Rule 166a states that no-evidence motions for summary judgment are subject to sanctions provided for under existing law.³¹⁹

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT EVIDENCE

Rule 166a specifies that the following may constitute summary judgment evidence: deposition transcripts, interrogatory answers, other discovery responses, pleadings, admissions, affidavits (including sworn or certified papers attached to the affidavits), stipulations of the parties, and authenticated or certified public records.

A. General Principles

The rules of evidence apply equally in trial and summary judgment proceedings.³²⁰ Thus, summary judgment evidence must be presented in a form that would be admissible in a conventional trial

proceeding.³²¹

Neither the motion for summary judgment, nor the response, even if sworn, is proper summary judgment proof.³²² “When both parties move for summary judgment, the trial court may consider the combined summary-judgment evidence to decide how to rule on the motions.”³²³ “The proper scope for a trial court’s review of evidence for a summary judgment encompasses all evidence on file at the time of the hearing or filed after the hearing and before judgment with the permission of the court.”³²⁴ Evidence need not be attached to the motion itself, but rather may be attached to the brief in support.³²⁵ The standard of review on appeal of the trial court’s admission of summary judgment evidence is abuse of discretion.³²⁶ “To obtain reversal of a judgment based on error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, an appellant must show that the trial court’s ruling was in error and that the error probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment.”³²⁷ Unlike a trial on the merits, “[a] summary judgment cannot be based on an attack of a witness’s credibility.”³²⁸

An attorney’s explanation of how he or she expects an expert to testify, offered in response to a discovery request, is not competent summary judgment evidence.³²⁹

The evidentiary exclusion found in Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 193.6,³³⁴ which applies to the exclusion of evidence due to an untimely response to a discovery request, applies to summary judgment proceedings.³³⁵ Thus, the supreme court has upheld the striking of an expert’s affidavit because the plaintiff did not timely disclose the expert under the parties’ scheduling order.³³⁶ Under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 193.6, a party may overcome the exclusion by establishing good cause or the lack of unfair surprise or unfair prejudice.³³⁷

2. Unfiled Discovery. The Texas Rules of Civil Procedure no longer require the filing of most discovery with the trial court. The discovery material that is not filed is specified in Rule 191.4(a).³³⁸ Discovery material that must be filed is specified in

(a) Exclusion of Evidence and Exceptions. A party who fails to make, amend, or supplement a discovery response in a timely manner may not introduce in evidence the material or information that was not timely disclosed, or offer the testimony of a witness (other than a named party) who was not timely identified, unless the court finds that:

(1) there was good cause for the failure to timely make, amend, or supplement the discovery response; or

338. Rule 191.4(a) provides:

(a) Discovery Materials Not to Be Filed. The following discovery materials must not be filed:

(1) discovery requests, deposition notices, and subpoenas required to be served only on parties;

(2) responses and objections to discovery requests and deposition notices, regardless on whom the requests or notices were served;

(3) documents and tangible things produced in discovery; and

(4) statements prepared in compliance with Rule 193.3(b) or (d).

Rule 191.4(b).³³⁹

A subsection to the summary judgment rule, Rule 166a(d), requires that a party may either attach the evidence to the motion or response or file a notice containing specific references to the unfiled material to be used, as well as a statement of intent to use the unfiled evidence as summary judgment proof.³⁴⁰ Specifically, Rule 166a(d) provides:

(d) Appendices, References and Other Use of Discovery Not Otherwise on File. Discovery products not on file with the clerk may be used as summary judgment evidence if copies of the material, appendices containing the evidence, or a notice containing specific references to the discovery or specific references to other instruments, are filed and served on all parties together with a statement of intent to use the specified discovery as summary judgment proofs: (i) at least twenty-one days before the hearing if such proofs are to be used to support the summary judgment; or (ii) at least seven days before the hearing if such proofs are to be used to oppose the summary judgment.³⁴¹

Thus, Rule 166a(d) provides three methods to present unfiled discovery before the trial court in a summary judgment motion or response. A party may file the discovery with the trial court, file an appendix containing the evidence, or simply file a notice with specific references to the unfiled discovery. If the actual documents are before the trial court, the rule does not require that the proponent of the evidence provide specific references to the discovery for the trial court to consider it.³⁴² Despite the wording of the rule that makes it appear that a “statement of intent” may be sufficient without the actual proof attached, some courts of appeals have refused to consider such proof if the appellate record does not demonstrate that the evidence was filed with the trial court when the motion for summary judgment

(a) Discovery Materials to Be Filed. The following discovery materials must be filed:

- (1) discovery requests, deposition notices, and subpoenas required to be served on nonparties;
- (2) motions and responses to motions pertaining to discovery matters; and
- (3) agreements concerning discovery matters, to the extent necessary to comply with Rule 11.

order was entered.³⁴³

3. Objections to Evidence. Failure to object to evidence at the trial court level waives any defects concerning form (such as hearsay, speculation, and competence).³⁴⁴ Nonetheless, there are inconsistencies among the courts concerning whether certain defects are defects of form or substance. The safest practice is to present all objections in writing.³⁴⁵

The objection must be specific.³⁴⁶ For example, in Womco, Inc. v. Navistar International Corp., the Tyler Court of Appeals held that an individual paragraph of an affidavit that contained unsubstantiated legal conclusions was itself conclusory because it failed to identify which statements in individual paragraphs were objectionable or offer any explanation concerning the precise bases for objection.³⁴⁷

To be effective and preserve error for appeal, most courts of appeals have held that an order of a trial court sustaining an objection to summary judgment evidence must be reduced to writing, signed by the trial court, and entered of record.³⁴⁸ A docket sheet

App.—Waco 2008, no pet.). “[A]ny objections relating to substantive defects (such as lack of relevancy, conclusory) can be raised for the first time on appeal and are not waived by the failure to obtain a ruling from the trial court.” *McMahan v. entry does not meet this requirement.³⁴⁹ Absent a proper order sustaining an objection, all of the summary judgment evidence, including any evidence objected to by a party, is proper evidence that will be considered on appeal.³⁵⁰

An exception to the requirement for a written ruling on an evidentiary objection may occur if there is an implicit ruling on the evidentiary objection.³⁵¹ For there to be an implicit ruling, there must be something in the summary judgment order or the record to indicate that the trial court ruled on the objections, other than the mere granting of the summary judgment.³⁵² There is dispute among the courts of appeals concerning what constitutes an implicit holding, and even disagreement as to the question of whether an objection may be preserved under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 33.1(a)(2)(a) by an implicit ruling.³⁵³ An example of a court holding that a ruling was implicit was where the appellant complained in his motion for new trial following the court's refusal to act on his objections.³⁵⁴

Texas Rule of Evidence 802 provides that “[i]nadmissible hearsay admitted without objection shall not be denied probative value merely because it is hearsay.”³⁵⁵ As applied to summary judgment evidence, Rule 802 has been held to mean that a hearsay objection is a defect in form that must be raised in a response or reply to a response.³⁵⁶ Whether an affiant has personal knowledge and is competent are also objections to form and thus must be raised and ruled upon at the trial level.³⁵⁷

4. Attach Evidence to Motion for/Response to Summary Judgment. Texas Rule of Procedure 166a does not require that evidence be attached to the motion for summary judgment to be considered.³⁵⁸ The evidence must only be on file at the time of the summary judgment hearing, or filed thereafter and before judgment with permission of the court.³⁵⁹ “Although [the movant] bears the burden to prove its summary judgment as a matter of law, on appeal [the nonmovant appellant] bears the burden to bring forward the record of the summary judgment evidence to provide appellate courts with a basis to review his claim of harmful error.”³⁶⁰ “If the pertinent summary judgment evidence considered by the trial court is not included in the appellate record, an appellate court must presume that the omitted evidence supports the trial court’s judgment.”³⁶¹

B. Pleadings as Evidence

Generally, factual statements in pleadings, even if verified, do not constitute summary judgment evidence.³⁶² However, this rule is not as absolute as it appears. A plaintiff may not use its pleadings as “proof” to defeat an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment. However, the defendant may use the plaintiff’s pleadings to obtain a summary judgment when the pleadings affirmatively negate the plaintiff’s claim.³⁶³ Sworn account cases are also an exception to the rule that pleadings are not summary judgment evidence.³⁶⁴ When the defendant files no proper verified denial of a suit on a sworn account, the pleadings can be the basis for summary judgment.³⁶⁵ Also, an opponent's pleadings may constitute summary judgment proof if they contain judicial admissions, which are statements admitting facts or conclusions contrary to a claim or defense.³⁶⁶ In Hidalgo v. Surety Savings & Loan Ass'n, the supreme court explained that a summary judgment may be granted on deficiencies in the opposing pleadings.³⁶⁷ The court stated:

We are not to be understood as holding that summary judgment may not be rendered, when authorized, on the pleadings, as, for example, when suit is on a sworn account under Rule 185, Texas Rules of Civil Procedure, and the account is not denied under oath as therein provided, or when the plaintiff's petition fails to state a legal claim or cause of action. In such cases summary judgment does not rest on proof supplied by pleading, sworn or unsworn, but on deficiencies in the opposing pleading.³⁶⁸

The bottom line is that a party may not rely on factual allegations in its motion or response as summary judgment evidence. Those allegations must be supported by separate summary judgment proof. In some instances, it may rely on its opponent's pleadings.

C. Depositions

If deposition testimony meets the standards for summary judgment evidence, it will support a valid summary judgment.³⁶⁹ Deposition testimony is subject to the same objections that might have been made to questions and answers if the witness had testified at trial.³⁷⁰ Depositions only have “the force of an out of court admission and may be contradicted or explained in a summary judgment proceeding.”³⁷¹ Deposition testimony may be given the same weight as any other summary judgment evidence. Deposition testimony has no controlling effect as compared to an affidavit, even if the deposition is more detailed than the affidavit.³⁷² If conflicting inferences may be drawn from two statements made by the same party, one in an affidavit and the other in a deposition, a fact issue is presented.³⁷³ Several courts of appeals have held that a “party cannot file an affidavit that contradicts that party’s own deposition testimony, without explanation, for the purpose of creating a fact issue to avoid summary judgment.”³⁷⁴ If an affidavit contradicts earlier testimony, the affidavit must explain the reason for the change.³⁷⁵ Without an explanation, the court assumes that the sole purpose of the affidavit is to avoid summary judgment, and as such, the affidavit “presents merely a ‘sham’ fact issue.”³⁷⁶ Thus, an affidavit may not be considered as evidence where it conflicts with the earlier sworn testimony.

Deposition excerpts submitted as summary judgment evidence need not be authenticated.³⁷⁷ Copies of the deposition pages alone are sufficient.³⁷⁸

D. Answers to Interrogatories and Requests for Admissions

1. Evidentiary Considerations. To be considered summary judgment proof, answers to interrogatories and requests for admissions must be otherwise admissible into evidence.³⁷⁹ Interrogatories should be inspected for conclusions, hearsay, and opinion testimony, which must be brought to the attention of the trial court in a responsive pleading. Answers to requests for admissions and interrogatories may be used only against the party filing them.³⁸⁰ Because summary judgment evidence must meet general admissibility standards, a party may not use its own answers to interrogatories³⁸¹ or its denials to requests for admissions as summary judgment evidence.³⁸²

2. Deemed Admissions. “Deemed admissions are competent summary judgment evidence.”³⁸³ An unanswered admission is automatically deemed admitted.³⁸⁴ An unanswered admission is deemed admitted without the necessity of a court order, and any matter admitted is conclusively established against the party making the admission unless the court, on motion, allows the withdrawal of the admission.³⁸⁵ Thus, when a party fails to answer requests for admissions, that party will be precluded from offering summary judgment proof contrary to those admissions.³⁸⁶ “Admissions, once made or deemed by the court, may not be contradicted by any evidence, whether in the form of live testimony or summary judgment affidavits.”³⁸⁷ However, to

A response to a request for admission can only be used against “the party making the admission.”³⁹⁰ Any matter established under Rule 198 (Requests for Admission) (formerly Rule 169) is conclusively established for the party making the admission unless it is withdrawn by motion or amended with permission of the court.³⁹¹ “[T]he standards for withdrawing deemed admissions and for allowing a late summary judgment response are the same. E. Documents

Documents are another type of potential summary judgment proof that is not filed with the clerk of the court during the course of the pretrial proceedings.³⁹⁴

1. Attaching Documents to Summary Judgment Motion and Response. A motion for summary judgment must be supported by its proof and not by reference to the pleadings.³⁹⁵ As such, supporting documents should be attached either to the affidavit that refers to the document or to the motion for summary judgment itself.³⁹⁶ The “nonmovant may use a movant’s own exhibit against the movant to establish the existence of a fact question.”³⁹⁷

The importance of attaching all documentation to the motions for summary judgment and to the responses is illustrated in many cases. For example, in MBank Brenham, N.A. v. Barrera, the supreme court held that there was no evidence to conflict with movant’s summary judgment proof because, in its answer, the nonmovant failed to attach the opponent’s abandoned pleadings, which presumably raised fact issues.³⁹⁸ The court held that copies of the abandoned pleadings, with supporting affidavits or other authentication as required by Rule 166a, should have been attached to the response.³⁹⁹

In Zarges v. Bevan, the supreme court stated that, absent controverting summary judgment proof, an affidavit attached to a motion for summary judgment that incorporated by reference a certified copy of a note attached to plaintiff’s first amended petition, was enough to prove the movants were owners and holders of the note.⁴⁰⁰ Zarges illustrates again the importance of specifically calling to the court’s attention, by appropriate response, defects in the movant’s motion.⁴⁰¹

2. Evidentiary Considerations. Documentation relied on to support a summary judgment must be sound in terms of its own evidentiary value. In Dominguez v. Moreno, a trespass to try title case, the plaintiff attached to the summary judgment motion a partial deed from the common source to his father.⁴⁰² The “deed” contained no signature, no date, and supplied nothing more than a granting clause and a description of the land.⁴⁰³ The court held, in essence, that the writing was not a deed and was not a type of evidence that would be admissible at a trial on the merits.⁴⁰⁴

When using an affidavit to authenticate business records, the party offering the records must comply with Texas Rules of Evidence 803(6) and 902(10).⁴⁰⁵

3. Authentication of Documents. Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 193.7 represents a significant departure from the former requirements to authenticate documents. Documents produced by the opposing party need not be authenticated.

a. Authentication of Producing Party’s Documents. Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 193.7 provides that documents produced by the opposing party in response to written discovery are self-authenticating.⁴⁰⁶ Specifically, it provides:

Production of Documents Self-Authenticating.

A party’s production of a document in response to written discovery authenticates the document for use against that party in any pretrial proceeding or at trial unless—within ten days or a longer or shorter time ordered by the court, after the producing party has actual notice that the document will be used—the party objects to the authenticity of the document, or any part of it, stating the specific basis for objection. An objection must be either on the record or in writing and must have a good faith factual and legal basis. An objection made to the authenticity of only part of a document does not affect the authenticity of the remainder. If objection is made, the party attempting to use the document should be given a reasonable opportunity to establish its authenticity.⁴⁰⁷

Thus, a document produced in response to written discovery

Texas Rule of Evidence 803(6) provides an exception to the hearsay rule for “Records of Regularly Conducted Activity.” Texas Rule of Evidence 902(10) allows for self-authentication of “Business Records Accompanied by Affidavit.”

authenticates that document for use against the producing party.⁴⁰⁸ Conversely, a party cannot authenticate a document for its own use by merely producing it in response to a discovery request.

It is not necessary to object for failure to authenticate or to obtain a ruling on such an objection because the complete absence of authentication is a defect of substance that is not waived by the failure to object and may be urged for the first time on appeal.⁴⁰⁹

b. Copies Allowed. Rule 196.3(b) also allows the producing party to offer a copy of the document unless the authenticity of the document is under scrutiny or because fairness under the circumstances of the case requires production of the original.⁴¹⁰ It provides:

(b) Copies. The responding party may produce copies in lieu of originals unless a question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or in the circumstances it would be unfair to produce copies in lieu of originals. If originals are produced, the responding party is entitled to retain the originals while the requesting party inspects and copies them.⁴¹¹

This rule's allowance of the production of copies seems to be "[i]n response to the proliferation of reading rooms and other modern practicalities of documents discovery."⁴¹²

c. Effect on Summary Judgment Practice. Self-authentication eliminates the initial burden of authenticating the opposing party's documents used as evidence in support of a motion for summary judgment or response. Such documents are presumed authentic, unless timely argued otherwise by the producing party.⁴¹³ The producing party, however, must still prove the document's authenticity if he or she wants to use it.

Because the objection to authenticity must be made within ten days after "actual notice that the document will be used,"⁴¹⁴ and the response to the motion for summary judgment is due seven days before the summary judgment submission,⁴¹⁵ the objection to authenticity may need to be made before filing the response to the motion for summary judgment. Until the appellate courts clarify this issue, the safer course will be to object to lack of authentication within ten days after the motion for summary judgment is filed and not wait until filing the response. The same problem exists for attempts to regain access to documents a party claims were inadvertently disclosed.⁴¹⁶

As is true at trial, authentication does not establish admissibility.⁴¹⁷ Authentication is but one condition precedent to admissibility.⁴¹⁸

4. Copies. Copies of original documents are acceptable if accompanied by a properly sworn affidavit that states that the attached documents are “true and correct” copies of the originals.⁴¹⁹ A copy of a letter, which is unauthenticated, unsworn, and unsupported by affidavit, is not proper summary judgment evidence.⁴²⁰

In Norcross v. Conoco, Inc., the court reversed a summary judgment on a sworn account because the affiants merely stated that the attached copies of invoices and accounts were correct copies of the original documents.⁴²¹ No reference was made concerning the affiant’s personal knowledge of the information contained in the attached invoice records.⁴²² The affiants did not state that the invoice or accounts were just and true, or correct and accurate.⁴²³ Thus, the court concluded that the invoices were not competent summary judgment proof.⁴²⁴

subject matter between the same or nearly identical parties.⁴²⁵ However, on motion for summary judgment, certified copies of court records from a different case, even if pending in the same court, should be attached to the motion in the second case.⁴²⁶ The failure of the movant to attach the records precludes summary judgment.⁴²⁷

F. Affidavits

Affidavits, which are sworn statements of facts signed by competent witnesses,⁴²⁸ are the most common form of summary judgment proof. Rule 166a provides that a party may move for summary judgment with or without supporting affidavits.⁴²⁹ However, before the adoption of the no-evidence summary judgment provision, it was unusual for a summary judgment to be granted without supporting affidavits. Proper no-evidence summary judgment motions do not require supporting evidence.⁴³⁰ In other types of summary judgments, more often than not, affidavits are the vehicle used to show the court that there are no factual questions. Conversely, they are commonly used by the nonmovant to demonstrate a fact issue in response to either no-evidence motions or traditional summary judgment motions. They also are used to contradict or explain previous testimony.⁴³¹

1. Form of Affidavits. Affidavits must be specific. They must contain specific factual bases that are admissible and upon which conclusions are drawn.⁴³² Statements made in the affidavit need factual specificity concerning time, place, and the exact nature of the alleged facts.⁴³³ The requirements for affidavits under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 166a(f) provide that the affidavit must show affirmatively that it is based on personal knowledge and that the facts sought to be proved would be “admissible in evidence” at a conventional trial.⁴³⁴

A verification, attached to the motion or response, that the contents are within the affiant’s knowledge and are both true and correct does not constitute a proper affidavit in support of summary judgment under Rule 166a(f).⁴³⁵ Although frequently used, “magic words” such as “true and correct,” or within “personal knowledge” are not required.⁴³⁶ The key is whether the affidavit clearly shows the affiant is testifying from personal knowledge. For an affidavit to have probative value, an affiant must swear that the facts presented in the affidavit reflect his or her personal knowledge.⁴³⁷ The affidavit “must itself set forth facts and show the affiant’s competency,” and the allegations contained in the affidavit “must be direct, unequivocal and such that perjury is assignable.”⁴³⁸

The requirement of Rule 166a(f) that the affidavit affirmatively show that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters contained in the affidavit is not satisfied by an averment that the affiant is over 21 years of age, of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, never convicted of a felony, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated. Rather, the affiant should detail those particular facts that demonstrate that he or she has personal knowledge.⁴³⁹

Phrases such as “I believe” or “to the best of my knowledge and belief” should never be used in a supporting affidavit. Statements based upon the “best of his knowledge” have been held insufficient to support a response raising fact issues.⁴⁴⁰ Such statements, according to the Fort Worth Court of Appeals in Campbell v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, are “no evidence at all.”⁴⁴¹ The court explained: “A person could testify with impunity that to the best of his knowledge, there are twenty-five hours in a day, eight days in a week, and thirteen months in a year. Such statements do not constitute factual proof in a summary judgment proceeding.”⁴⁴²

Conversely, Moya v. O'Brien suggests that the requirement that the affiant have personal knowledge does not preclude the use of the words “I believe” in a supporting affidavit, if the content of the entire affidavit shows that the affiant has personal knowledge.⁴⁴³ The court noted, however, that “when the portions of the affidavits containing hearsay are not considered, the remaining statements in the affidavits contain sufficient factual information to sustain the burden of proving the allegations in the motion for summary judgment.”⁴⁴⁴

In Grand Prairie Independent School District v. Vaughan, the supreme court considered a witness’s affidavit in which the words “on or about” were used to refer to a critical date.⁴⁴⁵ The court found that “on or about” meant a date of approximate certainty, with a possible variance of a few days, and that the nonmovant never raised an issue of the specific dates.⁴⁴⁶

An affidavit must be in substantially correct form. An affidavit may not be used to authenticate a copy of another affidavit.⁴⁴⁷ A purely formal deficiency in an affidavit, however, can be waived if it is not properly raised at the trial level.⁴⁴⁸

It is generally not advisable for the attorney representing the movant to make the affidavit, since the affidavit must be based on personal knowledge and not on information or belief.⁴⁴⁹ Plus, it may open the attorney to cross-examination.

2. Substance of Affidavits. The affidavit must set forth facts that would be admissible in evidence.⁴⁵⁰ It cannot be conclusory.⁴⁵¹ For example, a statement that the affiant is the “owner and holder of the title document and is entitled to possession of this manufactured home” is no more than a legal conclusion insufficient to support a summary judgment.⁴⁵² Nor can an affidavit be based on subjective beliefs.⁴⁵³ The line separating admissible statements of fact and inadmissible opinions or conclusions cannot always be precisely drawn. One of the policy considerations behind the prohibition against conclusory affidavits is that they are not susceptible to being readily controvertible.⁴⁵⁴

Schultz v. General Motors Acceptance Corp. provides an example of a conclusory affidavit.⁴⁵⁵ In Schultz, the court held that an affidavit supporting the creditor’s motion for summary judgment merely recited a legal conclusion in stating that certain collateral was disposed of “at public sale in conformity with reasonable commercial practices . . . in a commercially reasonable manner.”⁴⁵⁶ Summary judgment was precluded absent facts concerning the sale of the collateral in question.⁴⁵⁷

Texas courts have considered a number of other evidentiary issues for summary judgment affidavits. First, affidavits may not be based on hearsay.⁴⁵⁸ But “[i]nadmissible hearsay admitted without objection shall not be denied probative value merely because it is hearsay.”⁴⁵⁹ Next, “affidavits that violate the parol evidence rule are not competent summary judgment evidence.”⁴⁶⁰ Third, if the prerequisites of Texas Rule of Evidence 803(6), which sets out the requirements for admitting a business record into evidence, are not met, a business record may not be proper summary judgment proof.⁴⁶¹

3. Effect of Improper Affidavits. Affidavits that do not meet the requirements of Rule 166a will neither sustain nor preclude a summary judgment,⁴⁶² and will not be entitled to evidentiary consideration.⁴⁶³ If a deficiency in an affidavit is substantive, the opponent’s right to argue the deficiency on appeal is not waived by failure to except during the permissible time limits.⁴⁶⁴ However,

The personal knowledge requirement for affidavits is not met by a statement based upon the affiant’s “own personal knowledge and/or knowledge which he has been able to acquire upon inquiry.”⁴⁶⁶ Such a statement “provide[s] no representation whatsoever” that the facts contained in the affidavit are true.⁴⁶⁷

After objections are made to affidavits (and assuming that the new affidavit would be timely), affidavits may be supplemented.⁴⁶⁸

4. Affidavits by Counsel. The personal knowledge requirement of Rule 166a(f) has plagued attorneys signing summary judgment affidavits on behalf of their clients. Under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 14, “[w]henver it may be necessary or proper for any party to a civil suit or proceeding to make an affidavit, it may be made by either the party or his agent or his attorney.”⁴⁶⁹ While this seemingly approves counsel as an appropriate affiant for all purposes, courts have held that the rule does not obviate the need for personal knowledge of the facts in an affidavit.⁴⁷⁰ Merely swearing that the affiant is the attorney of record for a party, and that the facts stated in the motion for summary judgment are within his or her personal knowledge and are true and correct, does not meet the personal knowledge test.⁴⁷¹ This type of affidavit is ineffectual to oppose or support a motion for summary judgment on the merits, except concerning attorney's fees.⁴⁷² Unless the summary judgment involves attorney's fees, the attorney's affidavit should explicitly state that the attorney has personal knowledge of the facts in the affidavit and should recite facts that substantiate the lawyer's alleged personal knowledge.

If counsel is compelled to file an affidavit on the merits of a client's cause of action or defense, one court has suggested the proper procedure:

While Rule 14 of the Texas Rules of Civil Procedure permits an affidavit to be made by a party's attorney or agent, this rule does not obviate the necessity of showing that the attorney has personal knowledge of the facts, as distinguished from information obtained from the client. Ordinarily, an attorney's knowledge of the facts of a case is obtained from the client. Consequently, if the attorney must act as affiant, the better practice is to state explicitly how the information stated in the affidavit was obtained.⁴⁷³

However, an attorney may authenticate documents.⁴⁷⁴

G. Other Evidence

Summary judgment proof is not limited to affidavits and discovery materials. Parties can, and have, introduced a variety of additional forms of proof, including stipulations,⁴⁷⁵ photographs,⁴⁷⁶ testimony from prior trials,⁴⁷⁷ transcripts from administrative hearings,⁴⁷⁸ court records from other cases,⁴⁷⁹ the statement of facts from an earlier trial (now called the reporter's

H. Expert and Interested Witness Testimony

For many years, Texas courts held that interested or expert witness testimony would not support a summary judgment motion or response.⁴⁸⁴ However, the 1978 amendment to Rule 166a specifically permits the granting of a motion for summary judgment based on the uncontroverted testimonial evidence of an expert witness, or of an interested witness, if the trier of fact must be guided solely by the opinion testimony of experts as to a subject matter.⁴⁸⁵ The evidence must meet the following criteria: (1) it is clear, positive, and direct; (2) it is otherwise credible and free from contradictions and inconsistencies; and (3) it could have been readily controverted.⁴⁸⁶ contradictions, and susceptible to being readily controverted.⁴⁸⁷ An expert's opinion testimony can defeat a claim as a matter of law, even if the expert is an interested witness. Indeed, summary judgment evidence in the form of expert testimony might be necessary to survive a no-evidence summary judgment.⁴⁸⁸

But it is “the basis of the witness’s opinion, and not the witness’s qualifications or his bare opinions alone, that can settle an issue as a matter of law; a claim will not stand or fall on the mere ipse dixit of a credentialed witness.”⁴⁸⁹

Expert testimony must be comprised of more than conclusory statements and must be specific.⁴⁹⁰ For example, affidavits that recite that the affiant “estimates,” “believes,” or has an understanding of certain facts are not proper summary judgment evidence.⁴⁹¹ “Such language does not positively and unqualifiedly represent that the ‘facts’ disclosed are true.”⁴⁹² Likewise, legal conclusions of an expert are not probative to establish proximate cause.⁴⁹³ “Bare opinions alone” will not suffice to defeat a claim as a matter of law.⁴⁹⁴ “It is incumbent on an expert to connect the data relied on and his or her opinion and to show how that data is valid support for the opinion reached.”⁴⁹⁵ In one case, an affidavit that did not include the legal basis or reasoning for an attorney’s expert opinion that he did not commit malpractice was “simply a sworn denial of [plaintiff’s] claims.”⁴⁹⁶ Because it was conclusory, the court found it to be incompetent summary judgment evidence.⁴⁹⁷ Similarly, a conclusory statement by a Maryland doctor that a Texas doctor was entitled to be paid (and therefore not covered by the Good Samaritan statute) was not sufficient to create a fact issue.⁴⁹⁸ In another case, the supreme court found an expert's testimony insufficient to create a fact issue when she opined that the alleged negligent conduct of a hospital caused the plaintiff's injuries without an explanation of how the conduct was the cause in fact of the plaintiff's injuries.⁴⁹⁹ In another example, the Waco Court of Appeals held that an expert's statement that a ramp was unreasonably dangerous was a conclusory statement and, as such, was insufficient to defeat a summary judgment.⁵⁰⁰

The test for admissibility of an expert's testimony is whether the proponent established that the expert possesses knowledge, skill, experience, training or education regarding the specific issue before the court that would qualify the expert to give an opinion on that particular subject.⁵⁰¹ Mere conclusions of a lay witness are not competent evidence for the purpose of controverting expert opinion evidence.⁵⁰² For example, the existence of a causal connection between a certain chemical and injury or disease requires specialized expert knowledge and testimony because such matters are not within the common knowledge of lay persons.⁵⁰³ However, on subject matter in which the fact-finder would not be required to be guided solely by the opinion testimony of experts, lay testimony may be permitted.⁵⁰⁴ Lay testimony may be accepted over that of experts.⁵⁰⁵ Whether expert testimony is required is a question of law.⁵⁰⁶ Thus, in a situation where lay testimony is permitted, it can be sufficient to raise a fact issue.⁵⁰⁷ Also, an expert's affidavit that is based on assumed facts that vary from the actual undisputed facts has no probative force.⁵⁰⁸

Concerning legal fees, what constitutes reasonable fees is a question of fact. However, expert testimony that is clear, direct, and uncontroverted may establish fees as a matter of law.⁵⁰⁹ “To constitute proper summary judgment evidence . . . an affidavit [supporting attorney’s fees] must be made on personal knowledge, set forth facts which would be admissible in evidence, and show the affiant’s competence.”⁵¹⁰

b. Sufficiency of Expert Opinion. In E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson, the Texas Supreme Court held that an expert’s testimony must be based upon a reliable foundation and be relevant.⁵¹¹

The genesis of the standards of reliability and relevance concerning expert testimony was the U. S. Supreme Court case of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. It held that under the Federal Rules of Evidence, the trial court “must ensure that any and all scientific testimony or evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable.”⁵¹² In Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, the Supreme Court held that the Daubert factors apply to engineers and other experts who are not scientists.⁵¹³ The court must determine, pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 702, whether the expert opinion is “scientifically valid,” based on factors such as: (1) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication; (2) the known or potential rate of error of the technique; and (3) whether the theory or technique is “generally accepted” in the scientific community.⁵¹⁴

Similarly, Texas Rule of Evidence 702 states, “If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.”⁵¹⁵

The other relevant evidentiary rule, Texas Rule of Evidence 705, provides “[i]f the court determines that the underlying facts or data do not provide a sufficient basis for the expert’s opinion under Rule 702 or 703, the opinion is inadmissible.”⁵¹⁶

These rules impose a gatekeeping obligation on the trial judge to ensure the reliability of all expert testimony.⁵¹⁷ The trial judge fulfills this obligation by determining as a precondition to admissibility that: (1) the putative expert is qualified as an expert; (2) the expert’s testimony has a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of the relevant discipline; and (3) the testimony is relevant.⁵¹⁸

Use of experts in summary judgment practice requires meeting these standards for experts through summary judgment evidence. Many Daubert/Robinson battles are causation battles fought at the summary judgment stage. They are a unique mixture of trial and summary judgment practice. Generally, the defendant does one of two things: (1) moves for summary judgment on the grounds that its own expert testimony conclusively disproves causation and the plaintiff’s expert testimony does not raise a fact issue on causation because he or she does not pass the Daubert/Robinson test; or more simply, (2) moves for summary judgment on the grounds that there is no evidence of causation because the plaintiff’s causation expert testimony does not pass Daubert/Robinson. If the movant objects to expert evidence relied upon by the nonmovant based on reliability, the evidence must be both admissible and legally sufficient to withstand a no-evidence challenge.⁵¹⁹

The possible results of failure to meet the Daubert/Robinson tests are demonstrated by Weiss v. Mechanical Associated Services, Inc. In Weiss, the San Antonio Court of Appeals determined that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in effectively excluding the plaintiff’s expert testimony on causation by granting the defendant’s motion for summary judgment.⁵²⁰

The appellate court rejected any evidence by the expert on the grounds that it failed to meet the Robinson tests.⁵²¹

This ruling carries the following implications: (1) in a summary judgment proceeding, the movant challenging the expert's testimony need not request a Robinson hearing and secure a formal ruling from the trial court; and (2) the granting of the summary judgment, even if the order does not mention the expert challenge, in effect, is a ruling sustaining the movant's expert challenge.⁵²² Conversely, the El Paso Court of Appeals has held that if a trial court agrees that an expert's testimony is admissible, the expert's opinion constitutes more than a scintilla of evidence to defeat a no-evidence summary judgment.⁵²³ Other courts have implicitly ruled on the reliability of expert testimony at summary judgment.⁵²⁴

The Texarkana Court of Appeals in Bray v. Fuselier, however, refused to rule that the trial court's granting of summary judgment was an implicit ruling on the Robinson challenge because the defendant had made numerous other objections to the plaintiff's summary judgment evidence, and it could be argued that the court's granting of summary judgment was an implicit ruling on any one of these other objections.⁵²⁵

An expert's opinion that is unsupported and speculative on its face can be challenged for the first time on appeal.⁵²⁶

c. Procedural Issues. Before the advent of no-evidence motions for summary judgment in state practice, courts did not apply evidentiary sanctions and exclusions for failure to timely designate an expert in a summary judgment proceeding. However, now a party must timely disclose its expert as required by Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 193.6 or, absent a showing of good cause or lack of unfair surprise or prejudice, the trial court may properly strike the affidavit.⁵²⁷

As a practical matter, a party relying on an expert in either

City of San Antonio*, 40 S.W.3d 587, 595 (Tex. its summary judgment motion or response cannot wait until trial to develop the expert's qualifications. In United Blood Services v. Longoria, the Texas Supreme Court required summary judgment proof of an expert's qualifications in support of the response to a motion for summary judgment.⁵²⁸ Using an abuse of discretion standard, the supreme court upheld the trial court's determination that the expert was not qualified and entered a take-nothing judgment against the plaintiff who relied on the disqualified expert.⁵²⁹ The supreme court specifically rejected the approach of waiting for trial.⁵³⁰

The proponent of an expert bears the burden of demonstrating an expert's qualifications, reliability, and relevance.⁵³¹ "[O]nce a party objects to the expert's testimony, the party offering the expert . . . has the burden of proof to establish that the testimony is admissible."⁵³² For example, in Hight v. Dublin Veterinary Clinic, the court found no abuse of discretion in striking an expert's affidavit.⁵³³ Although the expert's affidavit provided information that the expert reviewed various records and that certain general principles exist in connection with the use of anesthesia, the affidavit had no information concerning the methodology and the basis underlying the opinion testimony and how they related to the expert's opinion.⁵³⁴ Without such information, the court found it impossible to determine the issue of reliability.⁵³⁵

The question then becomes how does one qualify an expert and establish reliability and relevance in a summary judgment context? This question is complicated by the significant procedural issues between summary judgment proceedings and expert procedure.

Procedurally, it should be sufficient for a defendant movant to file a no-evidence motion for summary judgment simply challenging the element of causation. The nonmovant would then come forward in its response with its expert testimony establishing causation. Then in its reply, the movant would raise specific challenges to admissibility and legal sufficiency of the expert's testimony.

Another issue that arises is that underlying procedural differences may complicate the decision of how to deal with experts in summary judgment proceedings.

i. The Evidence Supporting the Summary Judgment is Evaluated Differently. In a summary judgment hearing, the trial court assumes that all evidence favorable to the nonmovant is true, and determines if there is a genuine issue of fact.⁵³⁶ In a Daubert/Robinson hearing, once a party objects to the expert's testimony, the party offering the expert bears the burden of responding to each objection and showing that the testimony is admissible by a preponderance of the evidence.⁵³⁷ Then, the trial court evaluates evidence for reliability to determine admissibility.⁵³⁸

ii. The Standard of Review Applied on Appeal is Different. In reviewing the grant of a summary judgment, the appellate review is de novo.⁵³⁹ In a Robinson review, the appellate court applies an abuse of discretion standard.⁵⁴⁰ In the context of a summary judgment, a trial court's exclusion of expert testimony is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard.⁵⁴¹

Although acknowledging that a Robinson challenge in the summary judgment context invokes two different standards of review, a Houston court nevertheless concluded that, as a practical matter, any differences could not affect the result on appeal. The court stated:

In the context of a no evidence motion for summary judgment where, as here, expert evidence relied upon by the nonmovant is objected to by the movant based on reliability, the evidence must be both admissible and legally sufficient to withstand the no evidence challenge. Therefore, contrary to the parties' arguments in this regard, there is no issue here of which standard of review to apply (abuse of discretion or legal sufficiency) because both must ultimately be satisfied. Moreover, because we cannot, as a practical matter, envision a situation in which expert testimony would be reliable enough to be admissible or legally sufficient, but not the other, we believe that the decision reached on reliability will produce the same disposition, regardless [of] whether it is viewed from the standpoint of admissibility or legal sufficiency.⁵⁴²

iii. In a Summary Judgment Hearing, Oral Argument Is Typically Not Recorded and Is Not Considered as Evidence. A Daubert/Robinson hearing typically is recorded and included in the record on appeal. Conversely, no live testimony may be presented at a summary judgment hearing.⁵⁴³ In a Daubert/Robinson hearing, however, there is opportunity for live testimony by the expert and his or her cross-examination. This form of evidence is especially important when the outcome of the Daubert/Robinson hearing is case determinative.

These differences create a hybrid and seemingly inconsistent approach between expert and summary judgment procedure. Possibilities of how to deal with experts in summary judgment proceedings include:

(a) A Daubert/Robinson hearing. The expert's proponent may schedule a Daubert/Robinson hearing. In meeting its gatekeeping function, the trial judge must weigh the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, including the expert. Summary judgment procedure does not allow for this sort of give and take. Thus, if summary judgment opponents submit conflicting affidavits concerning one side's expert's qualifications, reliability, or relevance, the judge logically cannot apply summary judgment standards. A hearing is appropriate.

The Houston Fourteenth Court of Appeals has suggested use of a Daubert/Robinson hearing to overcome a challenge to an expert's reliability.⁵⁴⁴ However, for strategic purposes, an opponent of the expert may not want an evidentiary hearing. Under the logic of Weiss, all the opponent must do is file a motion for summary judgment and object to the expert's affidavit when it is attached as summary judgment evidence to the response.⁵⁴⁵ If the court grants the summary judgment, there is no error in failing to conduct a Daubert/Robinson hearing and through the granting of the summary judgment motion, the expert is inferentially ruled unqualified, unreliable, or irrelevant. Thus, unless a nonmovant is certain the judge will not grant the summary judgment, the wise course of action is to arrange for a Daubert/Robinson hearing.

If the Daubert/Robinson hearing is conducted at the same time as the summary judgment hearing, do not submit other summary judgment evidence. The case authority is strict that all summary judgment evidence must be in writing and may not be presented at a summary judgment hearing.⁵⁴⁶ The wisest course would be to hold the Daubert/Robinson hearing in advance of the summary judgment hearing. That way, if the judge strikes the expert, the proponent can find another or attempt to bolster that expert.

(b) Depose own expert. To make a Daubert/Robinson showing, a party may have to depose its own expert extensively about the factual basis for his or her opinions and about the scientific foundation for them. Affidavits may be too unwieldy to cover all the ground necessary to qualify an expert.

(c) Prepare detailed affidavits. Written reports from experts, unless sworn to, are not proper summary judgment evidence.⁵⁴⁷ If affidavits are used, the affidavits may require publications, articles, or other qualifying material attached to them.

2. Nonexpert, Interested Witness Testimony. In addition to expert testimony, nonexpert, interested party testimony may provide a basis for summary judgment.⁵⁴⁸ The interested party's testimony must also be "clear, positive and direct, otherwise credible . . . and could have been readily controverted."⁵⁴⁹ This determination is made on a case-by-case basis.⁵⁵⁰

An example of competent interested party testimony is provided by Texas Division-Tranter, Inc. v. Carrozza. In Carrozza, the supreme court found that in a retaliatory discharge action under the workers' compensation law, interested party testimony by supervisory and administrative personnel established a legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for the discharge.⁵⁵¹ The court explained that the affidavit testimony could have been readily controverted by facts and circumstances belying the employer's neutral explanation and thereby raising a material issue of fact.⁵⁵²

Statements of interested parties, testifying about what they knew or intended, are self-serving and do not meet the standards for summary judgment proof.⁵⁵³ Issues of intent and knowledge are not susceptible to being readily controverted and, therefore, are not appropriate for summary judgment proof.⁵⁵⁴ Nonetheless, the mere fact that summary judgment proof is self-serving does not necessarily make the evidence an improper basis for summary judgment.⁵⁵⁵ To meet the competency standard, interested witness testimony "must demonstrate personal knowledge, must positively and unqualifiedly state that the facts represented as true are true, and must not be conclusory."⁵⁵⁶ However, if the affidavits of interested witnesses are detailed and specific, those affidavits may be objective proof sufficient to establish the witnesses' state of mind as a matter of law.⁵⁵⁷

its credibility and try the case on affidavits.”⁵⁵⁸ Review of a summary judgment under either a traditional standard or no-evidence standard requires that the evidence be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant disregarding all contrary evidence and inferences.⁵⁵⁹ With the advent of no-evidence summary judgments in Texas, the burden of proof on summary judgment is now allocated in the same manner for defendants and plaintiffs in both state and federal court.⁵⁶⁰ “[T]he party with the burden of proof at trial will have the same burden of proof in a summary judgment proceeding.”⁵⁶¹

A defendant may move for summary judgment in the following ways:

- (1) by establishing that no material issue of fact exists concerning one or more essential elements of the plaintiff’s claims;
- (2) by establishing all the elements of its affirmative defense;
- (3) by asserting through a no-evidence summary judgment that the plaintiff lacks evidence to support an essential element of its claim; or
- (4) by proving each element of its counterclaim as a matter of law.

A plaintiff may move for summary judgment in the following ways:

- (1) by showing entitlement to prevail as a matter of law on each element of a cause of action, except damages;
- (2) by demonstrating the lack of a genuine issue of material fact concerning an affirmative defense; or
- (3) by attacking affirmative defenses through a no-evidence summary judgment.

A. Traditional Summary Judgments

law.⁵⁶² The party with the burden of proof must prove it is entitled to judgment by establishing each element of its own claim or defense as a matter of law or by negating an element of the nonmovant's claim or defense as a matter of law.⁵⁶³

1. Defendant as Movant. A summary judgment is proper for a defendant as movant only if the defendant establishes that no genuine issue of material fact exists concerning one or more essential elements of the plaintiff's claims and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.⁵⁶⁴ The movant has the burden of proof and all doubts are resolved in favor of the nonmovant.⁵⁶⁵

For example, in D. Houston, Inc. v. Love, the supreme court affirmed the appellate court's reversal of a summary judgment granted to a men's club because it failed to negate as a matter of law the duty to take reasonable care to prevent its employee from driving after she left work.⁵⁶⁶ The employee, an exotic dancer, claimed that the club required her to consume alcohol in sufficient amounts to become intoxicated. She also testified that the club made more money if a customer bought her drinks. She testified she consumed only alcohol purchased for her by customers. When asked in her deposition to admit she chose to order alcoholic rather than non-alcoholic beverages, she replied, "I wanted to keep my job."⁵⁶⁷ The supreme court held that this testimony, though controverted, raised a fact question regarding the club's control over the dancer's decision to consume sufficient alcohol to become intoxicated. Thus, the club did not disprove as a matter of law that it did not exercise sufficient control over the dancer to create a legal duty.⁵⁶⁸ plaintiff must show entitlement to prevail on each element of the cause of action,⁵⁶⁹ except damages. Damages are specifically exempted by Rule 166a(a).⁵⁷⁰ The plaintiff meets the burden if he or she produces evidence that would be sufficient to support an instructed verdict at trial.⁵⁷¹ The plaintiff is not under any obligation to negate affirmative defenses.⁵⁷² The mere pleading of an affirmative defense, without supporting proof, will not defeat an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment.⁵⁷³

Where the plaintiff is the movant on its affirmative claims, the plaintiff must affirmatively demonstrate by summary judgment evidence that there is no genuine issue of material fact concerning each element of its claim for relief.⁵⁷⁴ If the defendant also has a counterclaim on file, to be entitled to a final summary judgment, the plaintiff must: (1) establish the elements of its cause of action as matter of law; and (2) disprove at least one element of the defendant's counterclaim as a matter of law.⁵⁷⁵ Once the movant-defendant conclusively establishes the elements of its affirmative defense, the burden is shifted to the nonmovant-plaintiff to raise a genuine issue of material fact.⁵⁷⁶

3. Affirmative Defenses. The defendant urging summary judgment on an affirmative defense is in much the same position as a plaintiff urging summary judgment on an affirmative claim. The movant-defendant must come forward with summary judgment evidence for each element of the affirmative defense.⁵⁷⁷

Unless the movant conclusively establishes the affirmative defense, the nonmovant-plaintiff has no burden to present summary judgment evidence to the contrary.⁵⁷⁸ Even so, it is a wise practice to file a response to every summary judgment motion. “[A]n unpleaded affirmative defense may also serve as the basis for a summary judgment when it is raised in the summary judgment motion, and the opposing party does not object to the lack of a [R]ule 94 pleading in either its written response or before the rendition of judgment.”⁵⁷⁹

Defendants seeking summary judgment based on the statute of limitations, an affirmative defense, face a dual burden.⁵⁸⁰ In Burns v. Thomas, the supreme court held that a defendant seeking a summary judgment on the basis of limitations must prove when the cause of action accrued.⁵⁸¹ The defendant must also negate the discovery rule by proving as a matter of law that there is no genuine issue of fact about when the plaintiff discovered or should have discovered the nature of the injury.⁵⁸² Thus, when the nonmovant interposes a suspension statute, the burden is on the movant to negate the applicability of the tolling statute.⁵⁸³ This burden does not apply to a party seeking to

A plaintiff who has conclusively established the absence of disputed fact issues in its claim for relief will not be prevented from obtaining summary judgment because the defendant merely pleaded an affirmative defense.⁵⁸⁵ An affirmative defense will prevent the granting of a summary judgment only if the defendant supports each element of the affirmative defense by summary judgment evidence.⁵⁸⁶

A party raising an affirmative defense in opposition to a motion for summary judgment must either: (1) present a disputed fact issue on the opposing party's failure to satisfy his or her own burden; or (2) establish at least the existence of a fact issue on each element of his or her own affirmative defense by summary judgment proof.⁵⁸⁷

The thrust of the no-evidence summary judgment rule is to require evidence from the nonmovant.⁵⁹¹

A no-evidence summary judgment will be upheld if the summary judgment record reveals no evidence of a challenged element. Specifically, if:

- (1) there is a complete absence of evidence concerning the challenged element;
- (2) the evidence offered to prove a challenged element is no more than a scintilla;
- (3) the evidence establishes conclusively the opposite of the challenge element; or
- (4) the court is barred by rules of law or of evidence from giving weight to the only evidence offered to prove the challenged element.⁵⁹²

Potentially, a no-evidence motion for summary judgment could be two pages long and the response two feet thick. The movant need not produce any evidence in support of its no-evidence claim.⁵⁹³ Instead, “[t]he mere filing of [a proper] motion shifts the burden to the [nonmovant] to come forward with enough evidence to take the case to a jury.”⁵⁹⁴ If the nonmovant does not come forward with such evidence, the court must grant the motion.⁵⁹⁵

A no-evidence summary judgment is essentially a pretrial directed verdict.⁵⁹⁶ The amount of evidence required to defeat a no-evidence motion for summary judgment parallels the directed verdict and the no-evidence standard on appeal of jury trials.⁵⁹⁷ Thus, if the nonmovant brings forth more than a scintilla of evidence, that will be sufficient to defeat a no-evidence motion for summary judgment.⁵⁹⁸

A plaintiff attacking affirmative defenses by way of a no-evidence motion for summary judgment must state the elements of the affirmative defense for which there is no evidence.⁵⁹⁹ Thus, the plaintiff must plead with specificity the elements of each affirmative defense that it claims lack evidence.⁶⁰⁰

1. “Reasonable Juror” Test Applied to No-Evidence Summary Judgments. In determining a “no-evidence” issue, the courts review the evidence presented in the light most favorable to the party against whom the summary judgment was rendered, crediting evidence favorable to that party if reasonable jurors could, and disregarding evidence unless reasonable jurors could not.⁶⁰¹ An appellate court reviewing a summary judgment must consider whether reasonable and fair-minded jurors could differ in their conclusions in light of all of the evidence presented.⁶⁰² In Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Spates, the court noted that it reviewed summary judgments for evidence that “would enable reasonable and fair-minded jurors to differ in their conclusions.”⁶⁰³ In Spates, the court upheld a no-evidence summary judgment on the basis that a reasonable juror could not have found that a Wal-Mart employee had constructive notice of a plastic ring over which a plaintiff had tripped, because the only evidence was that the ring was behind an employee’s back for 30 to 45 seconds. The court explained: “Had there been evidence it had been on the floor for an extended period of time, reasonable jurors might assume that the employee should have seen it unless she sidled into the aisle or never took her eyes off the shelves. But on this record, that would be pure speculation.”⁶⁰⁴ Thus, the court found that there was no evidence that Wal-Mart should have discovered the six-pack ring that the plaintiff alleged was hazardous.⁶⁰⁵

The supreme court reaffirmed the applicability of the “reasonable juror” test to no-evidence summary judgment review in Mack Trucks, Inc. v. Tamez.⁶⁰⁶ The court held that the plaintiff's expert testimony on the cause of a post-accident fire in a truck accident case had been properly excluded and, therefore, the no-evidence summary judgment had been correctly granted on causation grounds.⁶⁰⁷ Specifically, the court referred to reviewing the evidence presented in the no-evidence motion and disregarding evidence contrary to the nonmovant's position (i.e., the movant's proof) unless a reasonable juror could not disregard that evidence.⁶⁰⁸ Thus, the opinion presupposes that the movant for a no-evidence summary judgment may support its motion with proof that cannot be disregarded on appeal.

In another example, the Texas Supreme Court determined that no reasonable juror could find that an employee acted in the course and scope of his employment at the time of an accident despite evidence that the employee received workers' compensation benefits.⁶⁰⁹

One commentator analyzed these cases to conclude:

Thus, in no-evidence summary judgment litigation where the movant has filed proof in support of its motion, the movant will generally want the core issue(s) and related proof to fall into one or more of the contextual, competency, consciousness or circumstantial evidence categories. In contrast, the non-movant will want the case to fall into the credibility of witnesses, conflicting evidence, or conflicting inferences categories. If the evidence falls into one of the movant's categories, then it must be considered on appeal whereas if it falls into one of the non-movant's categories, it cannot be considered by the appellate court.⁶¹⁰

2. Historical Development. Until 1997, summary judgment in federal court differed significantly from summary judgment in Texas state court.⁶¹¹ The Supreme Court of Texas discussed the difference in Casso v. Brand.⁶¹² In Casso, the supreme court noted the following:

Summary judgments in federal courts are based on different assumptions, with different purposes, than summary judgments in Texas. In the federal system, “[s]ummary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed ‘to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.’”⁶¹³

The Supreme Court of Texas explained that “federal courts place responsibilities on both movants and non-movants in the summary judgment process.”⁶¹⁴ The supreme court specifically refused to adopt the federal approach to summary judgments. The court explained: “While some commentators have urged us to adopt the current federal approach to summary judgments generally, we believe our own procedure eliminates patently unmeritorious cases while giving due regard for the right to a jury determination of disputed fact questions.”⁶¹⁵

At the time of Casso, the fundamental difference between state and federal summary judgment practice was the showing required by the movant before summary judgment would be granted. The court distinguished the two rules, stating:

While the language of our rule is similar, our interpretation of that language is not. We use summary judgments merely “to eliminate patently unmeritorious claims and untenable defenses,” and we never shift the burden of proof to the non-movant unless and until the movant has “establish[ed] his entitlement to a summary judgment on the issues expressly presented to the trial court by conclusively proving all essential elements of his cause of action or defense as a matter of law.”⁶¹⁶

In federal court, when the nonmovant bears the burden of proof at trial, that party alone has the burden of presenting competent evidence to avoid summary judgment.⁶¹⁷ Since 1997, this is also the state practice.

On September 1, 1997, Texas experienced a major change in summary judgment practice with the advent of no-evidence summary judgments.⁶¹⁸ In other words, the party without the burden of proof at trial (usually the defendant), without having to produce any evidence, may move for summary judgment on the basis that the nonmovant (usually the plaintiff) has no evidence to support an element of its claim (or defense).⁶¹⁹ Since then, there has been considerable case law addressing no-evidence summary judgments.

C. Both Parties as Movants

Both parties may move for summary judgment.⁶²⁰ When both parties move for summary judgment, each party must carry its own burden, and neither can prevail because of the failure of the other to discharge its burden.⁶²¹

(i) No-Evidence Motion. After adequate time for discovery, a party without presenting summary judgment evidence may move for summary judgment on the ground that there is no evidence of one or more essential elements of a claim or defense on which an adverse party would have the burden of proof at trial. The motion must state the elements as to which there is no evidence. The court must grant the motion unless the [nonmovant] produces summary judgment evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact.

TEX. R. CIV. P. 166a(i).

Part of that August 15, 1997 order approving the rule change reads that “[t]he comment appended to these changes, unlike other notes and comments in the rules, is intended to inform the construction and application of the rule.” TEX. R. CIV. P. 166a historical note. Thus, in effect, the comment has the force of the rule. It reads:

This comment is intended to inform the construction and application of the rule. Paragraph (i) authorizes a motion for summary judgment based on the assertion that, after adequate opportunity for discovery, there is no evidence to support one or more specified elements of an adverse party’s claim or defense. A discovery period set by pretrial order should be adequate opportunity for discovery unless there is a showing to the contrary, and ordinarily a motion under paragraph (i) would be permitted after the period but not before. The motion must be specific in challenging the evidentiary support for an element of a claim or defense; paragraph (i) does not authorize conclusory motions or general no-evidence challenges to an opponent’s case. Paragraph (i) does not apply to ordinary motions for summary judgment under paragraphs (a) or (b), in which the movant must prove it is entitled to judgment by establishing each element of its own claim or defense as a matter of law or by negating an element of the [nonmovant’s] claim or defense as a matter of law. To defeat a motion made under paragraph (i), the [nonmovant] is not required to marshal its proof; its response need only point out evidence that raises a fact issue on the challenged elements. The existing rules continue to govern the general requirements of summary judgment practice. A motion under paragraph (i) is subject to sanctions provided by existing law (TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE §§ 9.001–10.006) and rules (TEX. R. CIV. P. 13). The denial of a motion under paragraph (i) is no more reviewable by appeal or mandamus than the denial of a motion under paragraph (c).

When both parties move for summary judgment and one motion is granted and the other is overruled, all questions presented to the trial court may be presented for consideration on appeal, including whether the losing party's motion should have been overruled.⁶²² On appeal, the party appealing the denial of the motion for summary judgment must properly preserve this error by raising as a point of error or issue presented the failure of the trial court to grant the appellant's motion.⁶²³ If the appellant complains only that the trial court erred in granting the other side's motion for summary judgment and fails to complain that the court denied its own motions, it fails to preserve error on this issue and, if the appellate court reverses, it cannot render but can only remand the entire case.⁶²⁴

The appeal should be taken from the summary judgment granted.⁶²⁵ In Adams v. Parker Square Bank, both parties moved for summary judgment. The appellant limited his appeal to the denial of his own summary judgment, rather than appealing from the granting of his opponent's summary judgment. The court held that the appellant should have appealed from the order granting appellee's motion for summary judgment because an appeal does not lie solely from an order overruling a motion for summary judgment.⁶²⁶

In the absence of cross-motions for summary judgment, an appellate court may not reverse an improperly granted summary judgment and render summary judgment for the nonmoving party.⁶²⁷ Cross-motions should be considered by the responding party, when appropriate, to secure on appeal a final resolution of the entire case (i.e., "reversed and rendered" rather than “reversed and remanded”).⁶²⁸

The case of Hall v. Mockingbird AMC/Jeep, Inc. illustrates the advantage of filing a cross-motion for summary judgment. In Hall, the trial court granted a summary judgment for the plaintiff. The court of appeals reversed the trial court’s judgment and rendered judgment for the defendant. The supreme court reversed and remanded the cause, stating that judgment could not be rendered for the defendant because the defendant did not move for summary judgment.⁶²⁹

IV. RESPONDING TO AND OPPOSING A MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The most important development in summary judgment procedure was the Texas Supreme Court’s 1979 decision in City of Houston v. Clear Creek Basin Authority.⁶³⁰ In that case, the supreme court held that “both the reasons for the summary judgment and the objections to it must be in writing and before the trial judge at the hearing.”⁶³¹ In so holding, the court considered Rule 166a(c), which states in part: “Issues not expressly presented to the trial court by written motion, answer or other response shall not be considered on appeal as grounds for reversal.”⁶³² The court also considered the 1978 addition to Rule 166a, which provides: “Defects in the form of affidavits or attachments will not be grounds for reversal unless specifically pointed out by objection by an opposing party with opportunity, but refusal, to amend.”⁶³³

The necessity for a response is much more dramatic when the movant has filed a proper no-evidence motion for summary judgment. If the nonmovant fails to produce summary judgment evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact, the court must grant the motion.⁶³⁴ In other words, if the motion meets the requirements for a no-evidence summary judgment, the nonmovant must file a response.⁶³⁵

A. Responding: General Principles

The nonmovant must expressly present to the trial court any reasons for avoiding the movant's right to a summary judgment.⁶³⁶ In the absence of a response raising such reasons, these matters may not be raised for the first time on appeal.⁶³⁷ This requirement applies even if the constitutionality of a statute is being challenged.⁶³⁸

Defendants are not required to guess what unpleaded claims might apply and then negate them.⁶³⁹ They are required only to meet the plaintiff's case as pleaded.⁶⁴⁰ However, failure to object that an issue was raised for the first time in a response will result in trying the issue by consent in the summary judgment proceeding.⁶⁴¹

If the movant's grounds are unclear or ambiguous, the nonmovant should specially except and assert that the grounds relied upon by the movant are unclear or ambiguous.⁶⁴² The party filing special exemptions should ask for a signed order overruling or sustaining the special exceptions at or before the hearing.⁶⁴³ A court will not infer a ruling on the special exception from the disposition of the summary judgment alone.⁶⁴⁴

B. Responding to a Traditional Motion for Summary Judgment

For a traditional motion for summary judgment, it is not absolutely necessary, in theory, to file a response to a motion for summary judgment filed by a party with the burden of proof.⁶⁴⁵ Nonetheless, failing to file a response is not lying behind a log, but laying down your arms. Once the movant with the burden of proof has established the right to a summary judgment on the issues presented, the nonmovant's response should present to the trial court a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment.⁶⁴⁶ Failure to file a response does not authorize summary judgment by default.⁶⁴⁷ As a matter of practice, however, the nonmovant who receives a motion for summary judgment should always file a written response, even though technically no response to a traditional summary judgment motion may be necessary when the movant's summary judgment evidence is legally insufficient.⁶⁴⁸

C. Responding to a No-Evidence Summary Judgment Motion

Responding to a no-evidence summary judgment is virtually mandatory.⁶⁴⁹ A nonmovant must respond to a no-evidence summary judgment motion by producing summary judgment evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact.⁶⁵⁰ If the nonmovant fails to file a response and produce evidence, it is restricted to arguing on appeal that the no-evidence summary judgment is insufficient as a matter of law.⁶⁵¹ The trial court is required to grant summary judgment if the nonmovant produces no summary judgment evidence in response to the summary judgment motion.⁶⁵² The nonmovant must present evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact supporting each element contested in the motion.⁶⁵³ The same principles used to evaluate the evidence for a directed verdict⁶⁵⁴ or for the “no-evidence” standard applied to a jury verdict are used to evaluate the evidence presented in response to a no-evidence summary judgment.⁶⁵⁵ The nonmovant raises a genuine issue of material fact by producing “more than a scintilla of evidence” establishing the challenged elements’ existence and may use both direct and circumstantial evidence in doing so.⁶⁵⁶ More than a scintilla exists when the evidence is such that it “would enable reasonable and fair-minded people to differ in their conclusions.”⁶⁵⁷ Appellate courts review the evidence presented in the light most favorable to the party against whom the summary judgment was rendered, crediting evidence favorable to that party if a reasonable jury could, and disregarding contrary evidence unless reasonable jurors could not.⁶⁵⁸

Preexisting summary judgment law applies to evaluate evidence presented in response to a no-evidence summary judgment. If the nonmovant’s evidence provides a basis for conflicting inferences, a fact issue will arise.⁶⁵⁹ Also, the presumption applies equally for no-evidence and traditional motions for summary judgment that evidence favorable to the nonmovant will be taken as true, every reasonable inference will be indulged in favor of the nonmovant, and any doubts will be resolved in the nonmovant’s favor.⁶⁶⁰

The comment to Rule 166a(i) provides: “To defeat a motion made under paragraph (i), the [nonmovant] is not required to marshal its proof; its response need only point out evidence that raises a fact issue on the challenged elements.”⁶⁶¹ “To marshal one's evidence is to arrange all of the evidence in the order that it will be presented at trial."⁶⁶² A party is not required to present or arrange all of its evidence in response to a summary judgment motion; its response need only point out evidence that raises a fact issue on the challenged elements.⁶⁶³ Determining how much evidence is sufficient to defeat a no-evidence summary judgment may involve significant strategic decisions. However, "Rule 166a(i) explicitly provides that, in response to a no-evidence summary judgment motion, the [nonmovant] must present some summary judgment evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact on the element attacked, or the motion must be granted."⁶⁶⁴ Appellate courts review a no-evidence summary judgment for evidence that would enable reasonable and fair-minded jurors to differ in their conclusions.⁶⁶⁵

The nonmovant must come forward with evidence that would qualify as "summary judgment evidence," which is evidence that meets the technical requirements for summary judgment proof.⁶⁶⁶ The nonmovant may respond with deposition excerpts, affidavits, the opponent's answers to interrogatories and requests for admissions, stipulations, certified public records, authenticated documents, and/or other evidence that cases hold is proper summary judgment evidence.⁶⁶⁷ Non-summary judgment evidence, such as unsworn witness statements, expert's reports, or unauthenticated documents (except those produced by the opposing party), is not proper summary judgment evidence and cannot defeat a no-evidence summary judgment motion.⁶⁶⁸

A nonmovant retains the right to nonsuit even after a hearing on a no-evidence motion for summary judgment, so long as the trial court has not ruled.⁶⁶⁹

other issues of law or fact that could have been raised by the nonmovant, but were not.⁶⁷⁰ For example, a response that merely asserts that depositions on file and other exhibits “effectively illustrate the presence of contested material fact[s]” will not preclude summary judgment.⁶⁷¹ Further, a motion for summary judgment is not defeated by the presence of an immaterial fact issue,⁶⁷² nor does suspicion raise a question of fact.⁶⁷³ Generally, an amended answer by itself will not suffice as a response to a motion for summary judgment.⁶⁷⁴

Absent a written response to a motion for summary judgment, prior pleadings raising laches and the statute of limitations are insufficient to preserve those issues for appeal.⁶⁷⁵

V. APPEALING SUMMARY JUDGMENTS

By their nature, summary judgments are frequently appealed.⁶⁷⁶ Generally, an order granting a summary judgment is appealable; an order denying a summary judgment is not.⁶⁷⁷

TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 51.014(a)(5) (Vernon 2008). Another exception is an appeal of the denial of a summary judgment filed

Interlocutory orders are not appealable unless explicitly made so by statute.⁶⁷⁸ The denial of a no-evidence summary judgment under section (i) is no more reviewable by appeal or mandamus than the denial of other motions for summary judgment.⁶⁷⁹ Thus, the general rule is that they are not appealable.⁶⁸⁰ The only exceptions are: (1) when both parties file a motion for summary judgment and one is granted;⁶⁸¹ (2) when the denial of a summary judgment is based on official immunity;⁶⁸² (3) when the denial is of a media defendant's motion summary judgment in a defamation case;⁶⁸³ and (4) for a permissive appeal when the court of appeals agrees to accept a case and upon agreement of the parties.⁶⁸⁴

A. Exception: Both Parties File Motions for Summary Judgment

An exception to the rule that an order denying a summary judgment is not appealable arises when both parties file motions for summary judgment, and the court grants one of the motions and overrules the other.⁶⁸⁵ When both parties file motions for summary judgment and one is granted and the other overruled, the appellate court considers the summary judgment evidence presented by both sides, determines all questions presented, and if the appellate court determines that the trial court erred, renders the judgment the trial court should have rendered.⁶⁸⁶ A party appealing the denial of a summary judgment, however, must properly preserve this issue on appeal by raising the failure to grant the motion in the brief.⁶⁸⁷ On appeal, the appellate court should render judgment on the motion that should have been granted.⁶⁸⁸ However, before a court of appeals may reverse a summary judgment for the other party, both parties must ordinarily have sought final relief in their cross-motions for summary judgment.⁶⁸⁹

In Cincinnati Life Insurance Co. v. Cates, the supreme court expanded the ability of the courts of appeals to consider denials of summary judgment motions.⁶⁹⁰ In that case, the court directed courts of appeals to consider all summary judgment grounds the trial court rules on, including those on which it denied the summary judgment, and allowed the court of appeals to consider grounds which were urged and preserved for review but on which the court did not rule.⁶⁹¹

Even though both parties appeal cross motions for summary judgment, if the appellate court reverses one, it does not necessarily grant the other. If neither party is entitled to summary judgment, the appellate court must remand to the trial court.⁶⁹²

B. Exception: Government Immunity; Media Defendants

The Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code authorizes the appeal of an order denying a summary judgment in immunity cases. Section 51.014(a)(5) provides:

(a) A person may appeal from an interlocutory order of a district court, county court at law, or county court that:

(5) denies a motion for summary judgment that is based on an assertion of immunity by an individual who is an officer or employee of the state or a political subdivision of the state⁶⁹³

This section permits interlocutory appeals filed by individual governmental employees.⁶⁹⁴ “Immunity” as used in this section refers to “official immunity.”⁶⁹⁵ Official immunity is an affirmative defense rendering individual officials immune from liability.⁶⁹⁶ In such an interlocutory appeal, the appellate court will only consider those portions of the defendant's motion for summary judgment that relate to "official or quasi-judicial" immunity.⁶⁹⁷ If a governmental entity contends only that it is not liable because of sovereign immunity, no appeal may be taken from the denial of a summary judgment.⁶⁹⁸ A governmental unit's motion for summary judgment challenging a trial court's subject matter jurisdiction is appealable under Section 51.014(a)(8)⁶⁹⁹ even though the section refers only to appeals from an order granting or denying a "plea" to the jurisdiction.⁷⁰⁰ The Texas Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals from summary judgments denying government immunity unless there is a dissent in the court of appeals or there is conflicts jurisdiction.⁷⁰¹

The Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code also allows an appeal from a denial of a summary judgment based on a claim against the media arising under the free speech or free press clauses of the U.S. or Texas Constitutions.⁷⁰² Summary judgment is reviewed in public figure or public official defamation cases under the same standard as in other cases.⁷⁰³ This rule does not confer jurisdiction on the appellate court to consider a libel plaintiff's cross-point of error.⁷⁰⁴ An appeal in a media defendant summary judgment case does not necessarily stay the trial court proceedings.⁷⁰⁵ legislature has given the supreme court jurisdiction over an order that:

denies a motion for summary judgment that is based in whole or in part upon a claim against or defense by a member of the electronic or print media, acting in such capacity, or a person whose communication appears in or is published by the electronic or print media, arising under the free speech or free press clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, or Article I, Section 8, of the Texas Constitution, or Chapter 73⁷⁰⁶

C. Exception: Permissive Appeal

Although seldom used, if the parties agree, the appellate courts may accept jurisdiction over an interlocutory order.⁷⁰⁷ Specifically, an interlocutory appeal from a denial of a summary judgment (or other interlocutory order) may be taken if the trial court signs a written order for which: “(1) the parties agree that the order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion; (2) an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation; and (3) the parties agree to the order.”⁷⁰⁸ This procedure may be useful in a summary judgment context when the parties seek resolution of a determinative issue in a case.⁷⁰⁹

D. Likelihood of Reversal

During a one-year period, according to a study of appellate court opinions, more appeals were taken from summary judgments than any other type of judgment.⁷¹⁰ Conventional wisdom is that summary judgments are frequently reversed. However, that number is not as frequent as many believe.⁷¹¹ The statewide reversal rate for summary judgments was 33%, although the rates varied significantly by court of appeals.⁷¹² This compared with the reversal rate of 25% for judgments on jury verdicts⁷¹³ and an overall reversal rate for all civil appeals of 33%.⁷¹⁴

Broken down by substance, 41% of all summary judgments in contracts cases were reversed, 29% of those granted for tort defendants, 22% for personal injury defendants, and 24% for employers.⁷¹⁵ Texas courts of appeals reversed 58% of the time because they found a fact issue or some evidence to defeat the summary judgment, 31% because the trial judge made an error of law, and 11% for some procedural defect.⁷¹⁶

E. Finality of Judgment

An appeal may be prosecuted only from a final judgment.⁷¹⁷ Generally, to be final, a judgment must dispose of all parties and issues in the case.⁷¹⁸ In North East Independent School District v. Aldridge, the Texas Supreme Court articulated the following presumption of finality rule:

When a judgment, not intrinsically interlocutory in character, is rendered and entered in a case regularly set for a conventional trial on the merits, . . . it will be presumed for appeal purposes that the Court intended to, and did, dispose of all parties legally before it and of all issues made by the pleadings between such parties.⁷¹⁹

The rule applicable to summary judgments is different. The presumption of finality rule, as discussed in Aldridge, does not apply to summary judgment cases.⁷²⁰ A summary judgment that does not dispose of all parties and issues in the pending suit is interlocutory and is not appealable unless the trial court orders a severance of that phase of the case.⁷²¹ In the absence of an order of severance, a party against whom an interlocutory summary judgment has been rendered does not have a right of appeal until the partial judgment is merged into a final judgment, disposing of the whole case.⁷²²

In Lehmann v. Har-Con Corp., the Texas Supreme Court modified the procedure for determining whether a judgment is final.⁷²³ That procedure, which had caused a great deal of confusion, had been set out in Mafrige v. Ross.⁷²⁴ Under Mafrige, the “Mother Hubbard” provision in a judgment order, stating “all relief not expressly granted [herein] is denied,” was sufficient to make an otherwise partial summary judgment final and appealable.⁷²⁵ If the judgment granted more relief than requested, it was reversed and remanded but not dismissed.⁷²⁶ Thus, if the summary judgment on claims raised in the motion was proper, the court of appeals was to affirm the judgment of the trial court in part and reverse in part because only a partial summary judgment should have been rendered. The court was then to remand the case to the trial court for further proceedings.⁷²⁷ This process caused considerable confusion and sometimes led to unjust results.

In Lehmann, the court overruled Mafrige to the extent it states that “Mother Hubbard” clauses indicate “that a judgment rendered without a conventional trial is final for purposes of appeal.”⁷²⁸ The court of appeals is to look to the record in the case to determine whether an order disposes of all pending claims and parties.⁷²⁹ In In re Granite Shop, the Fort Worth Court of Appeals granted mandamus relief to order the trial court to rule on the petitioner's partial summary judgment motions after the appellate court reviewed the record to determine that the trial court had jurisdiction to consider the motion because an earlier summary judgment did not dispose of all the parties and thus was not final.⁷³⁰

In Lehman, the Texas Supreme Court also suggested the following language in a judgment to clearly show the trial court's intention that the judgment be final and appealable: "This judgment finally disposes of all parties and all claims and is appealable."⁷³¹ Nonetheless, there is no magic language required to determine whether a judgment is final. Instead, finality is determined from the language and record.⁷³² The court also noted that an order "must be read in light of the importance of preserving a party's right to appeal."⁷³³ It expressly provided that the appellate court could abate the appeal to permit clarification by the trial court if it is uncertain about the intent of the order.⁷³⁴ This ruling is consistent with the court's philosophy that form should not be elevated over substance.

Relying on Lehmann, the supreme court remanded a case in which a judgment had not disposed of a claim for attorney's fees, but had awarded costs.⁷³⁵ The court held that the summary judgment was not final because a party could move for a partial summary judgment and there is no presumption that a motion for summary judgment addresses all of the movant's claims. It also noted that awarding costs did not make a judgment final.⁷³⁶

A defendant (or plaintiff on an affirmative defense) is not entitled to summary judgment on the entire case unless the defendant files a summary judgment that challenges the evidentiary support for every theory of liability alleged.⁷³⁷ Thus, "the motion for summary judgment . . . must be analyzed in light of the pleadings to ensure that the motion effectively defeats every cause of action raised in the petition.”⁷³⁸ The summary judgment order, however, need not itemize each element of damages pleaded nor need it break down that ruling for each element of duty, breach, and causation.⁷³⁹ To complain on appeal about failure of the motion for summary judgment to address all causes of action alleged, the nonmovant appellant should specifically assign that failure as error.⁷⁴⁰ The fact that an unserved defendant is not disposed of by the order granting summary judgment does not mean that the order is interlocutory and not appealable. If an examination of the record establishes that the plaintiff did not expect to serve the unserved defendant and all parties appear to have treated the order as final, then the summary judgment is final for purposes of appeal.⁷⁴¹

Determining whether a summary judgment is final may especially be a problem with multi-party litigation.⁷⁴² A summary judgment granted for one defendant is final even though it does not specifically incorporate a previous partial summary judgment granted in favor of the only other defendant.⁷⁴³ Upon nonsuit of any remaining claims, an interlocutory summary judgment order instantly becomes final and appealable.⁷⁴⁴

Additionally, failure to dispose of or sever a counterclaim results in an interlocutory partial summary judgment, and thus, an appeal from such judgment is not proper.⁷⁴⁵ An order granting summary judgment for one claim, but not referring to issues presented in a counterclaim, is an interlocutory judgment.⁷⁴⁶ By assuming jurisdiction over a summary judgment that fails to dispose of a counterclaim, the court of appeals commits fundamental error.⁷⁴⁷ The supreme court will notice and correct such error even though neither party asserts it.⁷⁴⁸ However, relying on Lehmann, the Fort Worth Court of Appeals determined that the trial court implicitly denied the appellant's breach of contract counterclaim, which directly conflicted with the trial court's declaratory judgment ruling that the appellees had not breached the contract.⁷⁴⁹

The filing of a cross-action does not, in and of itself, preclude the trial court from granting a summary judgment on all or part of another party's case.⁷⁵⁰ A severance would be appropriate in such an instance.⁷⁵¹

While a severance frequently will be the appropriate method to convert an interlocutory summary judgment into a final appealable summary judgment, severance may not always be proper.

For a severance to be proper, more than one cause of action must be involved in the controversy, the severed cause must be one that can be asserted independently, and the severed action must not be so interwoven with the remaining action that they involve identical facts and issues or, in certain instances, relate to the same subject matter.⁷⁵²

The supreme court has set out a specific test for finality in probate appeals:

If there is an express statute, such as the one for the complete heirship judgment, declaring the phase of the probate proceedings to be final and appealable, that statute controls. Otherwise, if there is a proceeding of which the order in question may logically be considered a part, but one or more pleadings also part of that proceeding raise issues or parties not disposed of, then the probate order is interlocutory. For appellate purposes, it may be made final by a severance order, if it meets the severance criteria In setting this standard, we are mindful of our policy to avoid constructions that defeat bona fide attempts to appeal.⁷⁵³

F. Standard of Review

When a party moves for summary judgment on both a no-evidence and a traditional motion for summary judgment, the appellate courts first review the judgment under no-evidence standards.⁷⁵⁴ If the appellant has failed to produce more than a scintilla of evidence under no-evidence standards, the court has no need to address whether the appellee's summary judgment proof satisfied the burden under traditional summary judgment standards.⁷⁵⁵

In an appeal from a trial on the merits, the standard of review and presumptions run in favor of the judgment.⁷⁵⁶ The propriety of a summary judgment is a question of law. Thus appellate review is de novo.⁷⁵⁷ In contrast to an appeal from a trial on the merits, in an appeal from a summary judgment, the standard of review and presumptions run against the judgment.⁷⁵⁸

The Texas Supreme Court's decision in Gibbs v. General Motors Corp. sets out the standard of appellate review for traditional summary judgments.⁷⁵⁹ In Gibbs, the supreme court stated:

[T]he question on appeal, as well as in the trial court, is not whether the summary judgment proof raises fact issues with reference to the essential elements of a plaintiff's claim or cause of action, but is whether the summary judgment proof establishes as a matter of law that there is no genuine issue of fact as to one or more of the essential elements of the plaintiff's cause of action.⁷⁶⁰

When reviewing a no evidence summary judgment, appellate courts "review the evidence presented by the motion and response in the light most favorable to the party against whom the summary judgment was rendered, crediting evidence favorable to that party if reasonable jurors could, and disregarding contrary evidence unless reasonable jurors could not.”⁷⁶¹

Since the supreme court issued City of Keller v. Wilson,⁷⁶² courts of appeals continue to rely on Keller’s “reasonable jury” standard and “scintilla of evidence” standard.⁷⁶³ Less than a scintilla of evidence exists “[w]hen the evidence offered to prove a vital fact is so weak as to do no more than create a mere surmise or suspicion of its existence . . . in legal effect, [it] is no evidence.”⁷⁶⁴ More than a scintilla of evidence exists when the evidence “rises to a level that would enable reasonable and fair-minded people to differ in their conclusions” concerning existence of the vital fact.⁷⁶⁵

When reviewing a no-evidence summary judgment, the courts generally apply the same legal sufficiency standard applied in reviewing a directed verdict.⁷⁶⁶

The supreme court further set out the rules to be followed by an appellate court in reviewing a summary judgment record in *Nixon v. Mr. Property Management Co.*⁷⁶⁷ The court enumerated the rule as follows:

- (1) The movant for summary judgment has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.
- (2) In deciding whether there is a disputed material fact issue precluding summary judgment, evidence favorable to the non-movant will be taken as true.
- (3) Every reasonable inference must be indulged in favor of the non-movant and any doubts resolved in its favor.⁷⁶⁸

For those occasions when a summary judgment denial is appealable, the standard of review is the same.⁷⁶⁹ The appellate court will not consider evidence that favors the movant's position unless it is uncontroverted.⁷⁷⁰

The standard of review for whether there has been an adequate time for discovery is abuse of discretion.⁷⁷¹ Rulings concerning the admission or exclusion of summary judgment evidence are also reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard.⁷⁷² The decision to grant sanctions is a matter of discretion.⁷⁷³

G. Appellate Record

The appellate court may consider only the evidence that is on file before the trial court at the time of the hearing or, with permission of the court, is filed after the hearing but before judgment.⁷⁷⁴ Documents attached to briefs that are not part of the summary judgment record cannot be considered in an appeal.⁷⁷⁵ When the summary judgment record is incomplete, any omitted documents are presumed to support the trial court's judgment.⁷⁷⁶ Although the movant bears the burden to prove its summary judgment as a matter of law, on appeal the nonmovant bears the burden to bring forward the record of the summary judgment evidence to provide appellate courts with a basis to review its claim of harmful error.⁷⁷⁷

appellate record. The court upheld the summary judgment for the movant because the burden was on the nonmovant challenging the summary judgment to bring forward the record from the summary judgment proceeding in order to prove harmful error.⁷⁷⁸ In DeBell v. Texas General Realty, Inc., it was clear that the trial court considered at least one deposition that was not brought forward on appeal.⁷⁷⁹ The appellate court presumed that the missing deposition would have supported the summary judgment granted by the trial court.⁷⁸⁰

H. Appellate Briefs

The appellee in a summary judgment case is in a very different posture on appeal than an appellee in a case that was tried on its merits. Summary judgment review is de novo.⁷⁸¹ The appellate court reviews the evidence in a summary judgment case in a light most favorable to the nonmovant appellant.⁷⁸² Because the appellate court will be reviewing the summary judgment with all presumptions in favor of the appellant,⁷⁸³ it is not enough for the appellee to rest on the decision of the trial court. An appellee in a summary judgment appeal must thoroughly and carefully brief the case. The appellee should not simply refute the appellant's arguments, but should aggressively present to the appellate court the express reasons why the trial court was correct in granting summary judgment.⁷⁸⁴

The appellate rules allow an appellant the option of including points of error or questions presented.⁷⁸⁵ For appellants choosing points of error, the supreme court has approved the following single, broad point of error on appeal: "The trial court erred in granting the motion for summary judgment."⁷⁸⁶ This wording will allow argument concerning all the possible grounds upon which summary judgment should have been denied.⁷⁸⁷ Nonetheless, the appellant must attack each basis on which the summary judgment could have been granted.⁷⁸⁸ If it does not make a specific challenge to a ground, whether proper or improper, the summary judgment concerning that ground will be affirmed.⁷⁸⁹ Similarly, if the appellant fails to negate each ground on which the judgment may have been rendered, the appellate court must uphold the summary judgment.⁷⁹⁰

Issues not expressly presented to the trial court may not be considered at the appellate level, either as grounds for reversal or as other grounds in support of a summary judgment.⁷⁹¹ If the motion fails to address a claim, the movant is not entitled to summary judgment on that claim and judgment will be reversed and remanded to the trial court if it is based on that claim.⁷⁹² In Combs v. Fantastic Homes, Inc., the court defined “issue” within the context of Rule 166a as follows:

[A] summary judgment cannot be attacked on appeal on a question not presented to the trial court, either as a specific ground stated in the motion or as a fact issue presented by the opposing party in a written answer or other response. Accordingly, we hold that the opposing party, without filing an answer or other response, may raise for consideration on appeal the insufficiency of the summary-judgment proof to support the specific grounds stated in the motion, but that he may not, in the absence of such an answer or other response, raise any other “genuine issue of material fact” as a ground for reversal. In other words, the opposing party may challenge the grounds asserted by the movant, but he may not assert the existence of “issues” not presented to the trial court by either party.⁷⁹³

Cases disposed of by summary judgment often have voluminous clerk’s records.⁷⁹⁴ The importance of meeting the briefing requirements, such as referencing the page of the record where the matter complained of may be easily found, cannot be overemphasized.⁷⁹⁵ Appellate courts will not search the record, with no guidance from an appellant, to determine if a material fact issue was raised by the record. “Thus, an inadequately briefed issue may be waived on appeal.”⁷⁹⁶

I. Judgment on Appeal

An appellate court should consider all summary judgment grounds the trial court rules upon and the movant preserves for appellate review that are necessary for final disposition of the appeal.⁷⁹⁷ It now makes no difference whether the trial court specifies the reason in its order for granting the motion for summary judgment.⁷⁹⁸ When properly preserved for appeal, the court of appeals should review the grounds upon which the trial court granted the summary judgment and those upon which it

denied the summary judgment.⁷⁹⁹ In other words, the court of appeals must consider all grounds on which the trial court rules and may consider grounds on which it does not rule “in the interest of judicial economy.”⁸⁰⁰ Under the rules of appellate procedure, which require each party challenging the judgment to file an independent notice of appeal, it may be necessary to file a separate notice of appeal to properly preserve the claim that the summary judgment could be sustained on a point overruled or not ruled upon by the trial court.⁸⁰¹

If a summary judgment is reversed, the parties are not limited to the theories asserted in the original summary judgment at a later trial on the merits.⁸⁰² Also, the court of appeals may affirm the liability part of the summary judgment and reverse the damages portion of the summary judgment.⁸⁰³ Penalties have been assessed for bringing an appeal that the appellate court held to be taken for delay and without sufficient cause.⁸⁰⁴

If a party unsuccessfully moves for summary judgment and later loses in a conventional trial on the merits, an interlocutory order overruling the summary judgment motion is not reviewable on appeal.⁸⁰⁵

J. Bills of Review

A bill of review is an equitable proceeding by a party to a former action who seeks to set aside a judgment that is no longer appealable or subject to a motion for new trial.⁸⁰⁶ A petitioner must ordinarily plead and prove: (1) a meritorious claim or defense; (2) that he was unable to assert due to the fraud, accident, or wrongful act of his opponent; and (3) unmixed with any fault or negligence of his own.⁸⁰⁷ A summary judgment may be appropriate to challenge whether a party bringing a bill of review has adequately established these requirements.⁸⁰⁸

VI. ATTORNEY'S FEES

The amount of an award of attorney's fees "rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and its judgment will not be reversed without showing that the court abused its discretion."⁸⁰⁹ For a claim for attorney's fees under Chapter 38 of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code, "[t]he court may take judicial notice of the usual and customary attorney's fees" and the case file contents without further evidence being presented.⁸¹⁰

An appeals court cannot set aside an award of attorney's fees merely because it would have allowed more or less than the trial court.⁸¹¹ However, it does have authority, by examining the entire record, to determine whether a particular award is excessive.⁸¹² Appellate court justices may draw upon their knowledge as judges and lawyers and determine the matter in light of the testimony, the record, and the amount in controversy.⁸¹³

Attorney's fees must be specifically plead to be recovered. Failure to specifically request attorney's fees in the appellate court would not prevent the court from authorizing such an award.⁸¹⁴ When a movant includes attorney's fees in a summary judgment motion, in effect, the movant has added another cause of action. A challenge to attorney's fees should be raised in a separate ground in the summary judgment motion.⁸¹⁵ Pleadings alone, even if sworn to, are insufficient as summary judgment proof on fees.⁸¹⁶ Unless the court has taken judicial notice under section 38.004 of the Civil Practice and Remedies Code, such that no further evidence is necessary, this cause of action in a summary judgment case is measured by the same standard used for summary judgment proof.⁸¹⁷ If attorney's fees are recoverable under section 38.001 of the Civil Practice and Remedies Code,⁸¹⁸ in addition to the other summary judgment requirements, the time and notice requirements of Section 38.002 must be met to support an award of attorney's fees.⁸¹⁹

818. Section 38.001 provides:

A person may recover reasonable attorney's fees from an individual or corporation, in addition to the amount of a valid claim and costs, if the claim is for:

- (1) rendered services;
- (2) performed labor;
- (3) furnished material;
- (4) freight or express overcharges;
- (5) lost or damaged freight or express;
- (6) killed or injured stock;
- (7) a sworn account; or
- (8) an oral or written contract.

TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 38.001 (Vernon 2008).

819. Section 38.002 provides:

To recover attorney's fees under this chapter:

- (1) the claimant must be represented by an attorney;
- (2) the claimant must present the claim to the opposing party or to a duly authorized agent of the opposing party; and
- (3) payment for the just amount owed must not have been tendered before the expiration of the 30th day after the claim is presented.

TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 38.002 (Vernon 2008).

that opinion should be added to the motion for summary judgment.⁸²⁰ Such an affidavit is expert opinion testimony that may be considered regarding reasonable attorney's fees.⁸²¹ Additionally, the attorney for the nonmovant may file an affidavit contesting the reasonableness of the movant's attorney's affidavit in support of attorney's fees, thus creating a fact issue.⁸²²

In Karen Corp. v. Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Railway Co., the Fort Worth court contrasted an effective attorney affidavit in support of a request for attorney's fees with an ineffective affidavit in opposition.⁸²³ The movant's attorney's affidavit contained qualifications, rates, specific facts relating to the representation, and itemized billing. The inadequate affidavit in opposition claimed the other attorney's fees "appear excessive."⁸²⁴ The court determined that his opposition affidavit was conclusory, and when he qualified his opinion, he showed that he "lacked the needed personal knowledge to base a legally sufficient opinion on."⁸²⁵

A. Fixed Percentage Fees

Promissory notes may provide for attorney's fees in a fixed percentage clause that requires the payment of a stipulated percentage of the unpaid balance upon default.⁸²⁶ In a summary judgment proceeding when the note includes a stipulated percentage of the unpaid balance as attorney's fees, proof concerning the reasonableness of the fixed percentage fee is not required unless the pleadings and proof challenge the reasonableness of that amount.⁸²⁷ Thus, where a nonmovant offers no summary judgment evidence to indicate that the stipulated amount was unreasonable, the trial court's award of attorney's fees is proper.⁸²⁸

B. Reasonable Percentage Fees

The reasonableness of attorney's fees generally is an issue for the trier of fact.⁸²⁹ An exception to this rule is where "the testimony of an interested witness is not contradicted by any other witness, or attendant circumstances, and . . . is clear, direct and positive, and free from contradiction, inaccuracies, and circumstances tending to cast suspicion thereon."⁸³⁰ Promissory notes may provide for attorney's fees in a reasonable percentage clause that requires the maker to pay a reasonable fee upon default.⁸³¹ Although this type of clause requires opinion evidence, an attorney's affidavit is admissible.⁸³² Thus, a summary judgment based upon the affidavit testimony of the movant's attorney can be an appropriate vehicle for recovery of such attorney's fees.⁸³³ Whenever the word "reasonable" appears in connection with the recovery of, or entitlement to, attorney's fees, an affidavit in support of such fees should be included in the motion for summary judgment.⁸³⁴

VII. TYPES OF CASES AMENABLE TO SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Some types of cases particularly lend themselves to summary judgment disposition; other categories of cases are not appropriate for summary judgment disposition.⁸³⁵

A. Sworn Accounts

Motions for summary judgment often are used in suits on sworn accounts.⁸³⁶ Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 185 provides that a suit on a sworn account may be proper in the following instances:

When any action or defense is founded upon an open account or other claim for goods, wares and merchandise, including any claim for a liquidated money demand based upon written contract or founded on business dealings between the parties, or is for personal service rendered, or labor done or labor or materials furnished, on which a systematic record has been kept⁸³⁷

An action brought under Rule 185 is one of procedure, not of substantive law, with regard to the evidence necessary to establish a prima facie case of the right to recover.⁸³⁸ In a suit on a sworn account, a litigant whose opponent has not filed a proper answer under Rule 185 and Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 93(10)⁸³⁹ may secure what is essentially a summary judgment on the pleadings. In effect, noncompliance with these rules concedes that there is no defense.⁸⁴⁰

If the defendant in a suit on a sworn account fails to file a written denial under oath, that party will not be permitted at trial “to dispute receipt of the items or services or the correctness of the stated charges.”⁸⁴¹ As a general rule, a sworn account is prima facie evidence of a debt, and the account need not be formally introduced into evidence unless the account's existence or correctness has been denied in writing under oath.⁸⁴²

1. Requirements for Petition. A sworn account petition should be supported by an affidavit that the claim is "within the knowledge of affiant, just and true."⁸⁴³ Unless the trial court sustains special exceptions to the pleadings, no particularization or description of the nature of the component parts of the account or claim is necessary.⁸⁴⁴ If special exceptions are filed and sustained, the account (invoice or statement account) should show the nature of the item sold, the date, and the charge.⁸⁴⁵ In addition, if they are challenged by special exceptions, technical and unexplained abbreviations, code numbers, and the like are insufficient to identify items and terms and must be explained.⁸⁴⁶ Also, if special exceptions are sustained, the language used in the account must have a common meaning and must not be of the sort understood only in the industry in which it is used.⁸⁴⁷ If invoicing and billing is done with only computer numbers or abbreviations, a key to this "business shorthand" should be attached to the pleadings or be readily available if repleading is necessary.⁸⁴⁸

2. Answer/Denial. The answer must consist of a written denial supported by an affidavit denying the account.⁸⁴⁹ When a party suing on a sworn account files a motion for summary judgment on the ground that the nonmovant's pleading is insufficient under Rule 93(10) because no proper sworn denial is filed, the nonmovant may still amend and file a proper sworn denial.⁸⁵⁰ The nonmovant is not precluded from amending and filing a proper sworn denial to the suit itself at any time allowed under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 63.⁸⁵¹

In Brightwell v. Barlow, Gardner, Tucker & Garsek, the court considered whether it was proper for the verified denial to appear only in the affidavit in response to the motion for summary judgment but not in the defendant's answer.⁸⁵² The court stated that Rules 185 and 93(k) (now Rule 93(10)), when read together and applied to suits on sworn accounts, mandate that the language needed to "effectively deny . . . the plaintiff's sworn account must appear in a pleading of equal dignity with the plaintiff's petition, and therefore must appear in the defendant's answer."⁸⁵³

The filing of a proper, verified denial overcomes the evidentiary effect of a sworn account and forces the plaintiff to offer proof of the claim.⁸⁵⁴

3. Summary Judgment. There are two distinct grounds upon which a party may move for summary judgment in a suit on a sworn account: (1) the failure of the defendant to file an adequate answer; and (2) the elements of the suit are proved as a matter of law. In the first instance, the basis for the motion for summary judgment is that the defendant's answer was not a timely filed sworn pleading verified by an affidavit denying the account that is the foundation of the plaintiff's cause of action. In the second, the grounds are that the summary judgment evidence establishes the common law elements of an action.

Sworn accounts are an exception to the general rule that pleadings are not summary judgment proof. "When a defendant fails to file a verified denial to a sworn account, the sworn account is received as prima facie evidence of the debt and the plaintiff as summary judgment movant is entitled to summary judgment on the pleadings.”⁸⁵⁵ Rule 185 also provides that a systematic record, properly verified, “shall be taken as prima facie evidence thereof, unless the party resisting such claim shall file a written denial, under oath.”⁸⁵⁶ Thus, if the affidavit supporting the sworn account petition tracks the language of Rule 185 and meets the personal knowledge requirement of Rule 166a(f), it generally has been considered proper summary judgment proof in the absence of a sufficient answer to the original petition.⁸⁵⁷

If a defendant files a verified denial, the plaintiff must submit common law proof of its case.⁸⁵⁸ The necessary common law elements of an action are: “(1) that there was a sale and delivery of merchandise, (2) that the amount of the account is just, that is, that the prices are charged in accordance with an agreement, they are the usual, customary and reasonable prices for that merchandise, and (3) that the amount is unpaid.”⁸⁵⁹ If the resisting party does not support its claim with an affidavit, the movant is not forced to put on proof of its claim in a summary judgment proceeding and is entitled to summary judgment on the pleadings.⁸⁶⁰

A second affidavit in addition to that attached to the plaintiff's petition may be advisable to support a motion for summary judgment on a sworn account. This second affidavit should set forth, once again, the allegations of the sworn account petition. Strictly speaking, this additional affidavit is unnecessary if the answer on file is insufficient under Rules 185 and 93(10).⁸⁶¹ If the answer is sufficient under these rules, summary judgment is not precluded, but a second affidavit must be filed substantiating the account as a business record under

Texas Rule of Evidence 803(6).⁸⁶²

The attorney opposing a summary judgment in a suit based on a sworn account should immediately determine if a sworn denial in accordance with Rules 93(10) and 185 is already on file. If not, he or she should file one. It is sufficient to file a sworn answer denying the account that is the “foundation of the plaintiff’s action.”⁸⁶³ The filing of an answer in strict compliance with Rules 93(10) and 185 does not, however, preclude the need to also file a written response to a motion for summary judgment.⁸⁶⁴ As a matter of practice, attorneys should always file a written response to all motions for summary judgment.⁸⁶⁵

According to one commentator: “Motions for summary judgment will help ferret out those who file answers to buy time from those with genuine defenses and are also great discovery tools. Well drawn summary judgments often require the debtors’ attorneys to have serious talks with their clients about fees, resulting in serious settlement negotiations.”⁸⁶⁶

B. Suits on Written Instruments

Suits on written instruments such as contracts, promissory notes, and leases are commonly the subjects of motions for summary judgment.

A summary judgment is proper in cases involving the interpretation of a writing that is determined to be unambiguous.⁸⁶⁷ “Whether a contract is ambiguous is a question of law for the court to decide.”⁸⁶⁸ If a contract is worded in such a manner that it can be given a definite or certain legal meaning, then it is not ambiguous.⁸⁶⁹ Words used in an unambiguous contract are given their plain and ordinary meaning unless the instrument shows that the parties used the words in a technical or different sense.⁸⁷⁰ Because ambiguity is a legal question, a court may hold that an agreement is ambiguous even though both parties contend the contract is unambiguous.⁸⁷¹ An ambiguity in a contract may be either patent or latent.⁸⁷² When the writing contains an ambiguity, the granting of a motion for summary judgment is improper because the interpretation of the instrument becomes a fact issue.⁸⁷³

In a suit on a guaranty instrument, a court may grant a summary judgment only if the right to it is established in the record as a matter of law.⁸⁷⁴ “If the written instrument is so worded that it can be given a certain or definite legal meaning or interpretation, then it is not ambiguous and the court will construe the contract as a matter of law.”⁸⁷⁵

In promissory note cases, the motion for summary judgment and supporting evidence should establish (1) the note was executed by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff by the defendant; (2) the plaintiff gave value for the note to the defendant; (3) the plaintiff was the holder and owner of the note; (4) the note matured; (5) the defendant defaulted; and (6) the amount due.⁸⁷⁶ The supporting affidavits generally are provided by the owner and holder of the note, such as a corporate or bank officer.⁸⁷⁷ An example of such a case is Batis v. Taylor Made Fats,

Inc., in which the court found the plaintiff's summary judgment proof consisting of an affidavit by the business records custodian sufficient to support a summary judgment.⁸⁷⁸ Failure to attach a copy of the promissory note in a summary judgment motion in a suit on that note is fatal to the summary judgment.⁸⁷⁹ A photocopy of a note attached to the affidavit of the holder who swears that it is a true and correct copy of the note is sufficient as a matter of law to prove the status of owner and holder of the note absent controverting summary judgment evidence.⁸⁸⁰

In a suit on a promissory note, the plaintiff must establish the amount due on the note.⁸⁸¹ Generally, an affidavit that sets forth the balance due on a note is sufficient to sustain a summary judgment.⁸⁸² Detailed proof of the balance is not required.⁸⁸³ However, the summary judgment evidence must establish the amount due on the note.⁸⁸⁴ "[W]here an affidavit submitted in support of summary judgment lumps the amounts due under multiple notes with varying terms and provisions, an ambiguity can arise as to the balance due," precluding a summary judgment.⁸⁸⁵

1. Application of the Parol Evidence Rule. In cases based on written instruments, a common defense both at trial and on motions for summary judgment is an allegation of contemporaneous representations (parol evidence) that would entitle the defendant to modify the written terms of the note or contract.⁸⁸⁶ The parol evidence rule generally intends to keep out

extrinsic evidence of oral statements or representations relative to the making of a contractual agreement when that agreement is valid and complete on its face.⁸⁸⁷ In general, a written instrument that is clear and express in its terms cannot be varied by parol evidence.⁸⁸⁸

2. Exception to the Parol Evidence Rule. An important exception to the parol evidence rule permits extrinsic evidence to show fraud in the inducement of a written contract.⁸⁸⁹ The Texas Supreme Court addressed this problem in Town North National Bank v. Broaddus.⁸⁹⁰ In that case, three parties signed a note as obligors.⁸⁹¹ After default, the bank brought suit against the obligors.⁸⁹² The bank then moved for summary judgment against two of the co-obligors; the other party had filed for bankruptcy and was dismissed.⁸⁹³ Defendants alleged that a bank officer told them that they would not be held liable on the note.⁸⁹⁴ This misrepresentation, they argued, created fraud in the inducement.⁸⁹⁵ The defendants argued that this alleged fraud raised a question of fact precluding a grant of summary judgment.⁸⁹⁶ The court held that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show fraud in the inducement of a note only if, in addition to

C. Statute of Limitations/Statutes of Repose

Summary judgment may be proper in cases where the statute of limitations⁸⁹⁹ is pleaded as a bar to recovery.⁹⁰⁰ The statute of limitations is an affirmative defense for which the defendant must establish all the elements as a matter of law.⁹⁰¹ The movant for a summary judgment on the basis of the running of the statute of limitations assumes the burden of showing as a matter of law that the suit is barred by limitations.⁹⁰²

[T]he defendant must (1) conclusively prove when the cause of action accrued, and (2) negate the discovery rule, if it applies and has been pleaded or otherwise raised, by proving as a matter of law that there is no genuine issue of material fact about when the plaintiff discovered, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered the nature of its injury.⁹⁰³

The discovery rule must be negated by the defendant movant only if it is raised.⁹⁰⁴ However, if the plaintiff does not plead it, but raises the discovery rule for the first time in his or her summary judgment response, the defendant's failure to object will result in trying the issue by consent.⁹⁰⁵

Fraudulent concealment tolls or suspends the running of the statute of limitations.⁹⁰⁶ A party asserting fraudulent concealment as an affirmative defense to limitations must raise the issue and come forward with summary judgment evidence raising a fact issue on each element.⁹⁰⁷

Any of the plaintiff's claims or defenses pled in response to the defendant's affirmative defense on which the plaintiff would have the burden of proof at trial, including the discovery rule, fraudulent concealment, or tolling suspension provision may be properly challenged by a no-evidence summary judgment motion.

"If the movant establishes that the statute of limitations bars the action, the nonmovant must then adduce summary judgment proof raising a fact issue in avoidance of the statute of limitations."⁹⁰⁸ The relation back doctrine may save certain claims. The doctrine of relation back prevents a successful statute of limitations claim if the amended petitions relate back to a timely filed claim that does not arise from a wholly different transaction.⁹⁰⁹ The Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code provides that new facts or claims raised in a later pleading relate back to a timely filed pleading and are not barred unless the amendment or supplemental pleading "is wholly based on a new, distinct, or different transaction or occurrence."⁹¹⁰ Thus, an original pleading tolls the limitations period for claims asserted in a later, amended pleading if the amended pleading does not allege a wholly new, distinct, or different transaction.⁹¹¹ A "transaction" is defined as a set of facts that gives rise to the cause of action on which it is premised.⁹¹²

Defective pleadings that are not excepted to may satisfy the statute of limitations.⁹¹³ "To obtain summary judgment on the grounds that an action was not served within the applicable limitations period, the movant must show that, as a matter of law, diligence was not used to effectuate service.”⁹¹⁴ Existence of due diligence in effecting service is usually a fact issue.⁹¹⁵

Summary judgment may also be appropriate in a case barred by a statute of repose.⁹¹⁶ A statute of repose differs from a traditional statute of limitations. A traditional statute of limitations runs from the time that a cause of action accrues, which is not later than when the party first sustains or discovers an injury or damage.⁹¹⁷ With a statute of repose, the period begins running when the improvement is substantially completed rather than when a cause of action accrues.⁹¹⁸ Statutes of repose typically provide a definitive date beyond which an action cannot be filed.⁹¹⁹ Therefore, a statute of repose can cut off a right of action before an injured party discovers or reasonably should have discovered the defect or injury.⁹²⁰

The Texas statute of repose does not, however, bar an action based on willful misconduct or fraudulent concealment in connection with the performance of the construction or repair.⁹²¹ Thus, if the statute of repose period has expired, the nonmovant having an affirmative defense of fraudulent concealment must present enough proof to raise a fact issue; otherwise, summary judgment will be held proper.⁹²² issue precluded by collateral estoppel.⁹²⁴ “A partial summary judgment that is interlocutory and non-appealable is not final and cannot support a plea of res judicata.”⁹²⁵

The “transactional approach” applies to res judicata.⁹²⁶ In other words, a later suit will be barred if it arises out of the same subject matter of a previous suit and, through the exercise of diligence, could have been litigated in an earlier suit.⁹²⁷ Issue preclusion or collateral estoppel, as distinguished from res judicata, applies to “any prior adjudication of an issue in another action that is determined to be sufficiently firm to be accorded conclusive effect.”⁹²⁸ The court in Acker v. City of Huntsville stated, “The seminal test for finality sufficient to justify issue preclusion is whether the decision in the prior case is procedurally definite—was it adequately deliberated and firm, even if not final in the sense of forming a basis for a judgment already entered.”⁹²⁹

Relitigation of an issue will be barred by collateral estoppel if: “(1) the facts sought to be litigated in the first action were fully and fairly litigated in the prior action; (2) those facts were essential to the judgment in the first action; and (3) the parties were cast as adversaries in the first action.”⁹³⁰ Findings by a federal court beyond those necessary to make a decision are not “actually litigated” or “necessary to the outcome” so as to form the basis for collateral estoppel or res judicata.⁹³¹

E. Equitable Actions

In a case governed by equitable principles, summary judgment presents more potential difficulties than in the usual summary judgment case because there are no clear guidelines for determining what is a material fact.⁹³³ The main guiding principle in equitable actions is that an unfair or unjust result should be prevented.⁹³⁴ While summary judgment may occasionally be appropriate in equity cases, it is not appropriate “where the summary judgment record does not fully develop the facts on which the trial court’s equitable discretion must be exercised, and where the facts that are developed, though uncontroverted, can give rise to more than one reasonable inference.”⁹³⁵

F. Medical Malpractice

Summary judgments find their use primarily in two defenses to medical malpractice: (1) using expert testimony to negate breach of duty and proximate cause; and (2) urging the tolling of the statute of limitations.⁹³⁶

1. Negation of Elements of Medical Malpractice. In the past, the defendant physician in a malpractice case would file a motion for summary judgment that was accompanied by detailed affidavits from an expert witness or from the defendant that conclusively negated two elements of the plaintiff’s malpractice cause of action: breach of duty and proximate cause.⁹³⁷ In a

App.—El Paso 1980, writ ref’d n.r.e.) (stating that a certified copy of a prior judgment must be attached to a motion for summary judgment to be properly based on the doctrine of res judicata).

medical malpractice cause of action, the plaintiff “must prove, by competent testimony, that the defendant’s negligence proximately caused the plaintiff’s injury.”⁹³⁸ To do so, the plaintiff must prove four elements: “(1) a duty by the physician to act according to a certain standard; (2) a breach of the applicable standard of care; (3) an injury; and (4) a causal connection between the breach of care and the injury.”⁹³⁹ Now, under no-evidence summary judgment practice, a defendant doctor may move for summary judgment on the basis that the plaintiff has no evidence to support one or more of the elements.⁹⁴⁰ “To raise a fact issue sufficient to defeat a no-evidence summary judgment . . . the controverting expert evidence must identify the standard of care, establish the expert’s familiarity with that standard, and explain why the treatment rendered by the doctor breached the applicable standard of care.”⁹⁴¹ The threshold question in a medical malpractice case is the medical standard of care.⁹⁴² That standard must be established so the fact finder can determine whether the doctor’s act or omission deviated from the standard of care to the extent that it constituted negligence or malpractice.⁹⁴³ The standard of care by which physicians’ acts or omissions are measured is that degree of care that a physician of ordinary prudence and skill, practicing in the same or a similar community, would have exercised in the same or similar circumstances.⁹⁴⁴ In Hamilton v. Wilson, the Texas Supreme Court reversed a no-evidence summary judgment because it determined that the plaintiff’s expert opinion was based on factual evidence relating to the defendant doctor's standard of care and, in conjunction with the defendant doctor's testimony and the medical records, created a genuine issue of material fact.⁹⁴⁵ The supreme court made note of the statement by the court of appeals that the plaintiff's expert testimony was "not evidence that proves the questioned fact."⁹⁴⁶ The supreme court pointed out that, contrary to the implication of the statement by the court of appeals, the plaintiff was not required to prove facts as she alleged them.⁹⁴⁷ "Rather, she was only required to provide evidence that would enable reasonable and fair-minded jurors to differ in their conclusions."⁹⁴⁸

If proceeding under a traditional motion for summary judgment, a movant must take care in preparing the physician's affidavit. The medical standard of care must be established.⁹⁴⁹ Mere conclusory statements are not sufficient.⁹⁵⁰ Affidavits that do not thoroughly set out the standard of care applicable to the procedure involved at the time of the complained of incident and that fail to thoroughly explain how the standard was met or excluded are not sufficient summary judgment evidence.⁹⁵¹ In Hammonds v. Thomas, the affidavit of a defendant physician was deemed insufficient to establish the applicable standard of care in the community when it merely stated that the doctor was familiar with the standard of care and that the treatment was within that standard.⁹⁵² The affidavit must state the standard.⁹⁵³

In response, to maintain a cause of action against a doctor for malpractice, the plaintiff patient must prove by a doctor of the same school of practice as the defendant (or with knowledge of the specific issue which would qualify the expert to give an opinion on that subject) that the diagnosis or treatment complained of was such that it constitutes negligence and that it was a proximate cause of the plaintiff patient's injuries.⁹⁵⁴

Finally, in a medical malpractice case, a party cannot use an expert report as summary judgment proof when the report was originally used for complying with the procedural requirements of the Medical Liability and Insurance Improvement Act.⁹⁵⁵

A layperson with no medical background may not use his or her own affidavit in an attempt to raise a fact issue.⁹⁵⁶ Mere conclusions of a lay witness are not usually competent to controvert expert medical opinion. For that reason, Texas courts have uniformly rejected the argument in medical malpractice appeals that the opinions and conclusions of the plaintiff–affiant raised a fact issue to rebut the summary judgment proof presented by the defendant physician.⁹⁵⁷

2. Statute of Limitations. A defendant is entitled to a summary judgment if he or she conclusively establishes that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations.⁹⁵⁸ Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code, section 74.251(a) codifies article 4590i, section 10.01. claims.⁹⁵⁹ The Fort Worth Court of Appeals explained that:

Section 4.01(a) of article 4590i [now Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code § 74.051(a)] requires any person asserting a health care liability claim to give written notice of the claim to each physician and health care provider at least sixty days before filing suit. Notice given in accordance with section 4.01(a) tolls the applicable statute of limitations for seventy-five days, effectively creating a two-year-and-seventy-five-day statute of limitations.⁹⁶⁰

The limitations period for medical negligence claims is measured from one of three dates: “(1) the occurrence of the breach or tort, (2) the last date of the relevant course of treatment, or (3) the last date of the relevant hospitalization.”⁹⁶¹ A plaintiff “may not choose the most favorable date that falls within section 10.01’s three categories.”⁹⁶² Rather, the limitations period must begin on the date the alleged tort occurred if that date is ascertainable.⁹⁶³ Thus, if the date is ascertainable, further inquiry into the second and third categories is unnecessary.⁹⁶⁴ A defendant who fails to show conclusively that the limitations period has run under applicable limitations periods is not entitled to summary judgment. The plaintiff must raise the fact that he could not have discovered and filed suit within the two-year period in order to challenge the absolute two-year statute of limitations under the “open courts” provision of the Texas Constitution.⁹⁶⁵

The Texas Supreme Court, in Borderlon v. Peck, held that in a medical malpractice case, article 4590i, section 10.01 (now Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code § 74.051(a)) did not abolish fraudulent concealment as a basis for extending limitations in health care liability actions.⁹⁶⁶ Fraudulent concealment is a type of equitable estoppel doctrine.⁹⁶⁷ “The plaintiff must show the health-care provider actually knew a wrong occurred, had a fixed purpose to conceal the wrong, and did conceal the wrong from the patient.”⁹⁶⁸

The estoppel effect of fraudulent concealment terminates when the patient learns of facts, conditions, or circumstances that would cause a reasonably prudent person to make an inquiry that, if pursued, would lead to discovery of the concealed cause of action.⁹⁶⁹ Knowledge of these facts is equivalent to knowledge of the cause of action for the purposes of tolling the statute.⁹⁷⁰

G. Defamation Actions

Defamation actions are often resolved by summary judgment, not only because of the strong constitutional protections that apply, but also because many of the issues that determine whether summary judgment disposition is proper have been held to be matters of law. Understanding the elements and fundamentals of defamation law is necessary to summary judgment analysis of these cases.

Unlike most summary judgment actions, Texas law allows an interlocutory appeal from a denial of a summary judgment based on a claim against the media arising under the free speech or free press clauses of the U.S. or Texas Constitutions.⁹⁷¹ The standards for reviewing summary judgments in defamation actions are the same as for traditional summary judgments.⁹⁷²

1. Applicable Law. In Texas, libel is a defamatory statement in written form, published to one or more third persons, tending to injure a living person's reputation and, as a result, exposing the person to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or causing financial injury.⁹⁷³ Where the plaintiff is a public figure, the U.S. Constitution requires more than simple negligence; to prevail, a libel plaintiff must prove "actual malice," in the constitutional sense.⁹⁷⁴

To publish with actual malice, the defendant must have circulated the defamatory statement knowing that it was false or with "reckless disregard" as to its falsity.⁹⁷⁵ "Reckless disregard" is not negligence. It is "a high degree of awareness of probable falsity" and requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant "in fact entertained serious doubts as to the truth of his publication."⁹⁷⁶ Failure to investigate or failure to act reasonably before publishing the statement is distinct from actual malice.⁹⁷⁷ These requirements are designed to protect freedom of speech and freedom of the press.⁹⁷⁸

2. Questions of Law. Whether a statement is reasonably capable of a defamatory meaning initially is a question of law for the court.⁹⁷⁹ An allegedly libelous statement should be construed as a whole in light of the surrounding circumstances, considering "how a person of ordinary intelligence would perceive the entire statement.”⁹⁸⁰ Only if the language is ambiguous or of doubtful import should a jury determine a statement’s meaning and its effect on the mind of an ordinary reader.⁹⁸¹ Whether a plaintiff is a public figure is an issue of law for the court to decide.⁹⁸²

3. Plaintiff’s Burden of Showing Actual Malice. Public figures cannot recover on a claim for defamation absent proof of actual malice.⁹⁸³ Actual malice must exist within the mind of the defendant at the time the publication is made.⁹⁸⁴ A libel defendant is entitled to summary judgment if he or she can negate actual malice as a matter of law.⁹⁸⁵ Thus, even though the author’s subjective state of mind is at issue, a summary judgment may be properly granted.

In Casso v. Brand, the Texas Supreme Court first held that an interested party can negate actual malice as a matter of law through his or her affidavit concerning state of mind and lack of actual malice.⁹⁸⁶ This decision specifically overruled earlier decisions to the contrary.⁹⁸⁷

In Carr v. Brasher, decided the same day as Casso, the Texas Supreme Court again affirmed summary judgment for libel defendants in a case where the defendants negated actual malice with their own affidavits.⁹⁸⁸ Thus, through affidavits of interested witnesses, such as the publisher, editor, or reporter, the media defendant may negate actual malice as a matter of law.⁹⁸⁹ A libel plaintiff must ordinarily produce independent evidence of actual malice in order to refute the defendant’s denial.⁹⁹⁰ Therefore, summary judgment is proper where a defendant denies actual malice and the plaintiff is unable to offer proof that actual malice exists.⁹⁹¹

4. Qualified Privilege. “A qualified privilege extends to statements made in good faith on a subject in which the maker has an interest or duty, to another person having a corresponding interest or duty.”⁹⁹² Qualified privilege is an affirmative defense.⁹⁹³ Thus, a defendant bears the burden to conclusively establish each element of the privilege to prevail on its summary judgment motion.⁹⁹⁴

The affirmative defense of qualified privilege requires a defendant to show that the alleged defamatory statement: “(1) was made without malice; (2) concerned a subject matter of sufficient interest to the author or was in reference to a duty owed by the author; and (3) was communicated to another party with a corresponding interest or duty.”⁹⁹⁵

As noted, when a defendant in a defamation suit moves for summary judgment on the basis of qualified immunity, the defendant has the burden of conclusively proving that the statements were not made with malice.⁹⁹⁶ “A good faith belief in the truth of a statement may be evidence that the statement was made without malice, but it is not sufficient . . . to prove that the statement is actually true.”⁹⁹⁷

H. Governmental Immunity

Governmental immunity may be raised in a plea to the jurisdiction or in a motion for summary judgment.⁹⁹⁸ Official immunity is an affirmative defense.⁹⁹⁹ “Thus, the burden is on the defendant to establish all elements of the defense.”¹⁰⁰⁰ A government official is entitled to the benefit of official immunity so long as the official is: (1) acting within the course and scope of his or her authority; (2) performing discretionary functions; and (3) acting in good faith.¹⁰⁰¹

To prove good faith, a government official must show that his or her acts were within the realm of what a reasonably prudent government official could have believed was appropriate at the time.¹⁰⁰² This standard is met when the government official shows that the reasonably prudent government official, under the same or similar circumstances, would have believed that the benefit to the community from the activity in question substantially outweighed the risk of harm from the activity.¹⁰⁰³ To controvert the government official’s summary judgment proof on good faith, “the plaintiff must show that ‘no reasonable person in the defendant’s position could have thought the facts were such that they justified defendant’s acts.’”¹⁰⁰⁴ Unlike most other denials of motions for summary judgment, summary judgment denials in governmental immunity cases may be appealed.¹⁰⁰⁵

I. *Family Law Cases*¹⁰⁰⁶

Even though family law cases are necessarily fact driven, summary judgment disposition can be an effective way to partially or fully resolve some family law matters. The following are the most common.

1. Enforceability of Premarital and Marital Property Agreements. The enforceability of premarital and marital property agreements may be determined by summary judgment disposition.¹⁰⁰⁷ If a movant seeks to enforce the agreement, he or she may move for summary judgment relying only on the agreement itself.¹⁰⁰⁸ The agreement itself is sufficient evidence on which to move for summary judgment because, under Family Code Section 4.006, there is a rebuttable presumption that the agreement is enforceable.¹⁰⁰⁹ The party challenging the agreement as unenforceable has the burden to prove the agreement is unenforceable.¹⁰¹⁰ Upon the filing of the motion for summary judgment, the burden shifts to the nonmovant to come forward with enough evidence to raise a fact issue on whether the agreement is unenforceable.¹⁰¹¹

If the defendant is relying on an involuntary execution defense, the plaintiff may consider filing a no-evidence motion for summary judgment.¹⁰¹² To defeat summary judgment, the nonmovant must present enough evidence to raise a fact issue concerning whether the agreement was entered into voluntarily.¹⁰¹³

Whether the agreement was unconscionable when it was signed is a matter of law to be decided by the court.¹⁰¹⁴ The Houston Fourteenth Court of Appeals noted that an early determination of unconscionability is a better practice than waiting for submission of the case to a jury.¹⁰¹⁵ Summary judgment may be one way for the trial court to make this determination early in the proceedings.

2. Interpretation of Divorce Decrees. To resolve a dispute over property, a motion for summary judgment may be proper to ask the court to interpret a divorce decree. If the divorce decree, when read as a whole, is unambiguous concerning the property's disposition, the court may grant a summary judgment to effectuate the order in light of the literal language used.¹⁰¹⁶ Thus, even when a divorce decree does not contain express language disposing of a certain piece of property (such as the house your client inherited in the hypothetical), the court may still grant a summary judgment if the decree indicates the divorce court's decision to award the property solely to one spouse.¹⁰¹⁷

A motion for summary judgment may also be used to dispose of disputes that are barred by an agreement incident to divorce that a party would not re-open the divorce and that had been incorporated into the divorce decree.¹⁰¹⁸

3. Interpretation or Application of Law. A motion for summary judgment is also appropriate when the resolution of a question involving the interpretation or application of law will resolve a family law issue. The courts have determined the following through summary judgment disposition:

- A court cannot divide military benefits as community property in a former spouse's partition suit if the final divorce decree, issued before June 25, 1981, does not divide the benefits or reserve jurisdiction to divide those benefits.¹⁰¹⁹
- An employer may not be held liable for failing to prevent two employees from engaging in extramarital relations.¹⁰²⁰
- An employer does not have a duty to voluntarily disclose the existence and nature of an employee's benefits to the employee's spouse.¹⁰²¹
- The United States may not be ordered to pay a former spouse directly her portion of her ex-spouse's military retirement benefits based on sovereign immunity.¹⁰²²
- An agreement concerning the support of a non-disabled child over 18 is not enforceable when the agreed order incorporating the agreement does not expressly provide that the agreement's terms are enforceable as contract terms.¹⁰²³

4. Res Judicata/Collateral Estoppel. Another situation that may call for summary judgment disposition is when a family law issue has previously been litigated either in Texas or in another state. Res judicata and collateral estoppel precepts also apply in family law cases.¹⁰²⁴ For example, in Mossler v. Shields, a woman was estopped from bringing an action seeking to establish the existence of a common law marriage because a divorce action, making the same claim, had been dismissed with prejudice by another Texas court.¹⁰²⁵ Likewise, summary judgment has been used to dispose of an action that was already litigated to final judgment in another state. In Purcell v. Bellinger, the Texas Supreme Court affirmed a summary judgment barring a paternity action in Texas after the issue had been litigated to final judgment in New York.¹⁰²⁶

5. Characterization of Property. Property possessed by either spouse is presumed to be community property.¹⁰²⁷ However, traditional summary judgment may be used in some instances to establish the separate nature of such property. Partial summary judgment is available if you can present uncontroverted evidence that your client owned the property before the marriage and, without interruption, throughout the marriage.¹⁰²⁸ Partial summary judgment may also be appropriate to present uncontroverted evidence that a bank account is separate property and that the interest earned on the account (which is community property) was not commingled with the account.¹⁰²⁹

(“common law”) marriage claim may also be disposed of by summary judgment. A party that alleges an informal marriage must prove that: (1) the parties agreed to be married; (2) after the agreement they lived in Texas together as husband and wife; and (3) they represented to others that they were married.¹⁰³⁰ Also, both parties must possess the legal capacity to marry.¹⁰³¹ The informal marriage can be challenged by summary judgment either by the movant disproving one of the elements or by filing a no-evidence motion claiming that the nonmovant has no evidence to support one or more of the elements. For example, summary judgment has been used to dismiss a divorce action where one of the parties to the alleged informal marriage was under the age of eighteen and there was no evidence that the legal requirements for written or judicial consent under the Family Code were met.¹⁰³²

FEDERAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT PRACTICE

I. PROCEDURE FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENTS

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) governs the procedural requirements for summary judgment motions in federal court. It states summary judgment is proper when “the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.”¹⁰³³ Federal law also governs other procedural issues concerning summary judgment motions, such as the rules of evidence,¹⁰³⁴ the sufficiency of affidavits,¹⁰³⁵ and the timing and form of motions.¹⁰³⁶ In federal question cases, federal law and procedure are used to administer the entire case.¹⁰³⁷ Whereas in diversity cases, the applicable state law governs substantive issues and the federal rules regulate procedure.¹⁰³⁸

A. Timing

Under Rule 56, a party may move for summary judgment at any time until thirty days after the close of discovery.¹⁰³⁹ But it is important to note that local rules or scheduling orders may impose different deadlines for filing motions.¹⁰⁴⁰ Furthermore, if the respondent has not had an adequate time for discovery, summary judgment may be premature.¹⁰⁴¹

B. Notice and Hearing

Recent amendments to the Federal Rules have displaced the old ten-day rule. Rule 56 no longer mandates that “[t]he motion must be served at least 10 days before the day set for the hearing.”¹⁰⁴² Rather, the new rule neither mentions “hearing” nor provides for a specific time by which the motion must be served upon the opposing party.¹⁰⁴³

Moreover, federal courts rarely hold oral hearings on summary judgment because an oral hearing is not required.¹⁰⁴⁴ Therefore, in federal court, motions are typically ruled on by submission. Thus, attorneys seeking an oral hearing should check local rules and the judge’s procedures manual and file a motion specifically requesting an oral hearing.¹⁰⁴⁵ Generally the district court is not required to inform the respondent that the motion will be considered on a certain date.¹⁰⁴⁶

Furthermore, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(d) provides that a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) will be treated as one for summary judgment when the court considers matters outside the pleadings.¹⁰⁴⁷ The court need not, however, specifically notify the parties that the court will consider the motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment.¹⁰⁴⁸ Thus, counsel should remain aware that, although such notice is often given, it is not required.

Finally, a district court may enter summary judgment sua sponte.¹⁰⁴⁹ But in that instance, the court “must provide adequate notice and an opportunity to respond akin to that required by FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c).”¹⁰⁵⁰ The district court’s failure to give such notice may be harmless error if the respondent has no additional evidence or if all of the respondent’s additional evidence is reviewed on appeal and does not present a genuine issue of material fact.¹⁰⁵¹ If the party against whom summary judgment

C. Deadline to Respond

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) states, "A party opposing the motion must file a response within 21 days after the motion is served or a responsive pleading is due, whichever is later."¹⁰⁵³ Local rules, however, may specify or alter the date by which responses must be filed. For example, in the Southern District of Texas the response must be filed within twenty-one days of the filing of the motion.¹⁰⁵⁴ In the Northern District of Texas, the response is also due twenty-one days from filing.¹⁰⁵⁵ But in the Eastern District of Texas, the response is due twelve days from service of the motion;¹⁰⁵⁶ and in the Western District of Texas, the response is due eleven days from service of the motion.¹⁰⁵⁷ Failure to respond to a motion for summary judgment will be taken as a statement of no opposition¹⁰⁵⁸ and may lead to entry of summary judgment against the non-responding party.¹⁰⁵⁹

summary judgment.¹⁰⁶⁰ If the respondent to a motion for summary judgment believes disposition of the case is premature, he or she should file a Rule 56(f) motion with the proper supporting affidavit.¹⁰⁶¹ Failure to seek this relief may result in the consideration and entry of summary judgment¹⁰⁶² as well as waiver of the prematurity argument on appeal.¹⁰⁶³

The Fifth Circuit has made clear that “a continuance of a motion for summary judgment for purposes of discovery should be granted almost as a matter of course.”¹⁰⁶⁴ As a practical matter, the respondent seeking a continuance to conduct further discovery under Rule 56(f) must convince the court that the requested discovery is more than a fishing expedition, is likely to lead to controverting evidence, and was not reasonably available despite the respondent’s diligence.¹⁰⁶⁵ The burden to show that

Under Wichita Falls and International Shortstop, there are four elements a nonmovant must satisfy before a court will grant a continuance of summary judgment: (1) request extended discovery before the court rules on the summary judgment; (2) put the court on notice that further discovery relating to the summary judgment motion is being sought; (3) show the requested discovery relates to the summary judgment motion; and (4) act diligently such that the nonmovant was not placed in the current position through his own inaction. Wichita Falls Office Assocs., 978 F.2d at 919; *Int’l Shortstop, Inc. v. extended discovery is necessary and likely to produce such results squarely is on the party seeking the discovery.¹⁰⁶⁶ The court may be more inclined to grant a continuance if the respondent files discovery requests concurrently with Rule 56(f) declarations.

The Fifth Circuit has held, “A plaintiff’s entitlement to discovery prior to a ruling on a summary judgment motion may be cut off when, within the trial court’s discretion, the record indicates that further discovery will not likely produce facts necessary to defeat the motion.”¹⁰⁶⁷ In response, the party opposing the continuance for further discovery—the movant for summary judgment—should attempt to convince the court that the respondent’s discovery requests are simply a delay tactic. For example, the Rule 56(f) motion may be based on incontrovertible facts, may involve pure questions of law, or may request discovery that relates to immaterial issues.¹⁰⁶⁸

The decision to grant the continuance is within the sound discretion of the trial court and will be sustained unless the court acts arbitrarily or in a clearly unreasonable manner.¹⁰⁶⁹ “If [the movant] has not diligently pursued discovery, however, she is not entitled to relief under rule 56(f).”¹⁰⁷⁰ For example, the Fifth Circuit upheld the denial of a continuance when the plaintiff had ample time for discovery and the plaintiff’s request was conclusory in nature.¹⁰⁷¹ Moreover, the Fifth Circuit also has found that as little as nine months after the time the action was filed may constitute sufficient time for discovery.¹⁰⁷² In another case, the

II. STANDARDS OF PROOF FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS¹⁰⁷⁵

A. *When the Movant Bears the Burden of Proof*¹⁰⁷⁶

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure expressly permit the party bearing the burden of proof to move for summary judgment on its claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim.¹⁰⁷⁷ To obtain summary judgment in its favor, a claimant must demonstrate affirmatively by admissible evidence that there is no genuine issue of material fact concerning each element of its claim for relief.¹⁰⁷⁸ In addition, if the defendant has asserted an affirmative defense, the plaintiff must identify the lack of a genuine issue of any material fact concerning those defenses.¹⁰⁷⁹ Because the defendant has the burden of proof on affirmative defenses, the plaintiff need only demonstrate the absence of evidence on the affirmative defense.¹⁰⁸⁰

B. When the Movant Does Not Bear the Burden of Proof

1. Movant's Initial Burden. When a movant seeks summary judgment on a claim upon which it does not bear the burden of proof, it bears an initial burden under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) to demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact on the adverse party's claim.¹⁰⁸¹ The

movant cannot rely on a conclusory statement that the respondent has not presented evidence on an essential element of its claim.¹⁰⁸² Rather, the moving party must point out to the court specifically the absence of evidence showing a genuine dispute.¹⁰⁸³

The more difficult question is how to make this showing.¹⁰⁸⁴ The movant must identify the specific issue or issues on which it claims the respondent has no supporting evidence and Williamson, 224 F.3d 425, 440 (5th Cir. 2000) (recognizing when a defending party moves for summary judgment, it may not rely on a conclusory statement that the other party has no evidence; rather, the moving party must demonstrate that there are no factual issues warranting trial); Lavespere v. Niagara Mach. & Tool Works, Inc., 910 F.2d 167, 178 (5th Cir. 1990) (holding the movant may bear its burden by highlighting a lack of proof concerning an essential element of the respondent's case), abrogated on other grounds per curiam by Little v. City of Dallas*, 997 F.2d 62, 67 (5th Cir. 1993)).

1084. An interesting twist occurs when a party does not raise an issue until its reply brief. For example, in Vais Arms, Inc. v. Vais, the movant raised an issue for the first time in his reply brief. Vais Arms, Inc. v. Vais, 383 F.3d 287, 292 (5th Cir. 2004). When objecting on appeal, the Fifth Circuit stated, as long as the nonmovant had an adequate opportunity to respond prior to the trial court’s ruling on summary judgment, it cannot complain on appeal that the issue was not timely raised. Id. But it appears, in the Fifth Circuit at least, there must be some indication in the record that the nonmovant requested an opportunity to respond or that the court invited or allowed the nonmovant to respond or the granting of summary judgment will be reversible. See United States v. $92,203.00 in U.S. Currency, 537 F.3d 504, 507 n.1 (5th Cir. 2008) (refusing to consider evidence submitted post-briefing where the nonmovant was not provided an opportunity to respond). As the Fifth Circuit stated in Gillaspy v. Dallas Independent School District:

[T]here is no indication that [nonmovant] requested an opportunity to respond [to evidence proffered in a reply brief], nor any indication that the district court invited or allowed [nonmovant] an opportunity to file supplemental briefing. Because our jurisprudence is less than clear, we think it prudent to reverse the summary judgment . . . and remand the case to the district court to allow [nonmovant] to respond and offer additional argument and evidence if she has any.

Gillaspy v. Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist., 278 F. App’x 307, 315 (5th Cir. 2008) (per curiam). Other courts appear to have adopted this approach. See, e.g., Hughes v. Astrue, 277 F. App’x 646, 646–47 (8th Cir. 2008) (per curiam) (allowing the district court to consider evidence submitted in a reply brief as long as the opposing party has an opportunity to respond); Int’l Ctr. for Tech. Assessment v. Johanns, 473 F. Supp. 2d 9, 21 (D.D.C. 2007) (considering evidence submitted post-briefing on the ground that the opposing party had an opportunity to and did respond).

demonstrate the absence of such evidence.¹⁰⁸⁵ In so doing, the movant may:

- demonstrate the absence of evidence on a crucial element of the opposing party's case (e.g., plaintiff was asked to identify all companies who manufactured the product and did not list the defendant);¹⁰⁸⁶
- present evidence that disproves some essential element of the opposing party's case (e.g., admissions);¹⁰⁸⁷ or
- rely on the complete absence of proof of an essential element of the respondent's case.¹⁰⁸⁸

The Fifth Circuit discussed this burden in St. Paul Mercury Insurance Co. v. Williamson.¹⁰⁸⁹ There, a plaintiff asserting a RICO claim argued the defendants did not meet their initial burden of pointing out the absence of a triable issue.¹⁰⁹⁰ The Fifth Circuit disagreed, stating the defendants “did proffer evidence in support of their motion for summary judgment. In addition to pointing out the lack of evidence supporting [plaintiff's] claims, they offered affidavits, depositions, and other relevant documentary evidence.”¹⁰⁹¹ Although the defendants' evidence admittedly related to the “pattern of racketeering” issue, rather than the pertinent “investment in a RICO enterprise” inquiry, the Fifth Circuit found plaintiffs satisfied Rule 56(c).¹⁰⁹²

2. Respondent's Burden. The respondent to a summary judgment motion must come forward with specific facts demonstrating a genuine issue of material fact.¹⁰⁹³ Summary judgment in the movant's favor is appropriate if the respondent fails to make this showing.¹⁰⁹⁴ The burden to show there is a genuine issue of material fact is on the party who seeks to avoid a summary judgment.¹⁰⁹⁵ If no response is filed, Rule 56(e) provides that the court, if appropriate, should grant the motion for summary judgment.¹⁰⁹⁶ The Fifth Circuit, however, has held that a district court may not grant a summary judgment motion simply because the opposing party failed to respond even if the failure to oppose the motion violates a local rule.¹⁰⁹⁷

III. RESPONDING TO THE SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTION

A. Supreme Court Precedent

The seminal case on summary judgments in federal court is Celotex Corp. v. Catrett.¹⁰⁹⁸ There, a widow sued an asbestos manufacturer for the asbestos-related death of her husband.¹⁰⁹⁹ The defendant moved for summary judgment based on the widow's failure to produce evidence that her husband had been exposed to its products.¹¹⁰⁰ The defendant argued the widow's response consisted of inadmissible hearsay.¹¹⁰¹ The U.S. Supreme Court found summary judgment would be mandated if the plaintiff failed, after adequate time for discovery, to present evidence of matters on which she had the burden of proof.¹¹⁰² It remanded the case to the court of appeals to determine whether the evidence submitted by the plaintiff was sufficient to defeat summary judgment.¹¹⁰³ The Court's ruling illustrates it was not the defendant's burden to negate such issues.¹¹⁰⁴ Rather, the plaintiff was required to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact to be heard at trial.¹¹⁰⁵

In addition to Celotex, practitioners should be familiar with *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp.*¹¹⁰⁶ and *Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc.*¹¹⁰⁷ In those cases the Court expounded upon the meaning of the term "genuine issue of material fact." Liberty Lobby is instructive on what evidence raises a "genuine issue" sufficient to preclude entry of summary judgment.¹¹⁰⁸ At issue in Liberty Lobby was the question whether, in a suit for libel in a "New York Times case,"¹¹⁰⁹ the heightened evidentiary requirements applicable to proof of actual malice (i.e., the standard of clear and convincing evidence) must be considered for purposes of a summary judgment motion.¹¹¹⁰ Answering in the affirmative, the Court ruled the trial judge "must bear in mind the actual quantum and quality of proof necessary to support liability."¹¹¹¹ When evaluating the evidence presented by the respondent, "the judge must view the evidence presented through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden."¹¹¹² There is no genuine issue for trial where the record, taken as a whole, could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the respondent.¹¹¹³

Liberty Lobby also discussed the "materiality" element, stating, "Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment."¹¹¹⁴ The Court explained that the materiality determination rests upon the substantive law, and the substantive law identifies which facts are critical versus which facts are irrelevant.¹¹¹⁵ The Court clarified that materiality is only a criterion for categorizing factual disputes in relation to the legal elements of the claim.¹¹¹⁶

Matsushita considered what evidence was required to preclude entry of summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case.¹¹¹⁷ Under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, to survive a properly supported summary judgment motion by the defendants, the plaintiffs must present evidence that excluded the possibility the alleged conspirators acted independently.¹¹¹⁸ The Supreme Court thus turned to the applicable substantive law to analyze what facts would be material and, hence, crucial to the plaintiffs to withstand summary judgment.¹¹¹⁹

A genuine issue of material fact does not exist if the respondent's evidence merely shows "there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts."¹¹²⁰ Rather, a genuine issue of material fact exists only "when the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party."¹¹²¹ Moreover, there is an inverse relationship between the quality of the evidence the respondent must present and the overall plausibility of the respondent's claims.¹¹²² If the claims of the party bearing the burden of proof appear "implausible," that party must respond to the motion for summary judgment with more persuasive evidence to support its claim than would otherwise be required.¹¹²³ necessarily present his or her own summary judgment evidence. Instead, if the respondent believes evidence already submitted by the movant indicates the existence of a genuine issue of material fact, the respondent may direct the court's attention to that evidence and rely on it without submitting additional evidence.¹¹³¹ In any event, the respondent must set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial.¹¹³² It is not enough simply to rely on evidence in the record to avoid summary judgment without specifically referring to the precise evidence that supports the respondent's claim.¹¹³³ The respondent must "articulate the precise manner in which the submitted or identified evidence supports his or her claim."¹¹³⁴ Moreover, even when evidence exists in the record that would tend to support the respondent's claim, if the respondent fails to refer to it, that evidence is not properly before the court.¹¹³⁵ It is not the function of the court to search the record on the nonmovant's behalf for evidence that may raise a fact issue.¹¹³⁶

IV. SUMMARY JUDGMENT EVIDENCE

A. Declarations and Affidavits

Declarations or affidavits submitted in connection with summary judgment proceedings must:

- (1) be based on personal knowledge;¹¹³⁷

As an interesting aside, in a qualified immunity case, the Fifth Circuit explained that where "facts are disputed and significant factual gaps remain that require the court to draw several plaintiff-favorable inferences . . . [the court] must consider what a factfinder could reasonably conclude in filling these gaps and then assume the conclusion most favorable to the plaintiff." *Lytle v. - (2) state facts as would be admissible in evidence (i.e., evidentiary facts, not conclusions);¹¹³⁸ and
- (3) affirmatively demonstrate the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated in the affidavit.¹¹³⁹

Unsupported affidavits setting forth conclusions of law “are insufficient to either support or defeat a motion for summary judgment.”¹¹⁴⁰ A party cannot create an issue of fact merely by presenting testimony through a declaration that contradicts previous sworn testimony, such as deposition testimony.¹¹⁴¹ From a practical standpoint, failure to produce opposing affidavits frequently will doom an otherwise meritorious response.¹¹⁴²

B. Documents

not make them admissible.¹¹⁴⁴

C. Discovery Products

Summary judgment evidence may also consist of deposition testimony, interrogatory answers, or admissions.¹¹⁴⁵ As with other documentary evidence, these discovery documents must be properly authenticated (for example, by affidavit or declaration establishing the accuracy of the attached copy).¹¹⁴⁶ A party must serve and file the discovery responses with appropriate authentication, usually by attaching them as exhibits to an attorney's declaration.¹¹⁴⁷ Only those portions of deposition testimony otherwise admissible at trial are proper summary judgment proof.¹¹⁴⁸

The party submitting deposition testimony transcripts as summary judgment evidence must identify the precise sections of the testimony that support the party's position. It is important to note that "Rule 56 does not impose upon the district court a duty to sift through the record in search of evidence to support a party's opposition to summary judgment."¹¹⁴⁹ Consequently, the district court likely will not search through voluminous transcripts to find the testimony that allegedly raises a genuine issue of material fact.¹¹⁵⁰

Admissions made pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 36 are conclusive as to the matters admitted.¹¹⁵¹ These admissions "cannot be overcome at the summary judgment stage by contradictory affidavit testimony or other evidence in the summary judgment record."¹¹⁵² Rather, if a party seeks to avoid the consequences of failing to timely respond to Rule 36 requests for admissions, he or she should move to amend or withdraw the admissions in accordance with Rule 36(b).¹¹⁵³

D. Pleadings

In federal court, verified pleadings may be treated as affidavits if they meet the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(e),¹¹⁵⁴ which requires the facts asserted be within the pleader's personal knowledge and be otherwise admissible evidence.¹¹⁵⁵ Admissions by respondents in their pleadings, even if unverified, are competent summary judgment evidence.¹¹⁵⁶

As a practical matter, the use of cross-references to pleadings should be kept to a minimum in summary judgment practice. Although Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 10(c) provides that "statement[s] in a pleading may be adopted by reference elsewhere in the same pleading or in any other pleading or motion,"¹¹⁵⁷ counsel's use of this tactic should be utilized sparingly—especially in cases with numerous pleadings. In CQ, Inc. v. TXU Mining Co., the Fifth Circuit addressed the issue of whether a respondent to a summary judgment motion adequately referred to evidence in the record sufficient to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact by simply cross-citing its own motion for summary judgment.¹¹⁵⁸ In that case, although the court "decline[d] to endorse a bright-line rule," it found the respondent's "targeted cross-citation to [its] own motion" sufficiently referred to evidence in the record to support its notion that a genuine issue of material fact existed in the case.¹¹⁵⁹ Nevertheless, the better approach for practitioners is to attach all pertinent exhibits to the motion currently pending before the court and "articulate the precise manner in which the submitted . . . evidence supports [the] claim."¹¹⁶⁰ More importantly, local rules may require that summary judgment evidence be included in an appendix attached to the motion.¹¹⁶¹

E. Expert Testimony

An expert's testimony must be relevant and reliable in order to be considered competent summary judgment evidence.¹¹⁶² The trilogy of U.S. Supreme Court cases on admissibility of expert testimony regarding "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge"¹¹⁶³—Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc.,¹¹⁶⁴ General Electric Co. v. Joiner,¹¹⁶⁵ and *Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael*¹¹⁶⁶—sets out the standards by which federal trial courts must evaluate expert testimony.¹¹⁶⁷

Daubert mandates that trial judges, in accordance with Federal Rules of Evidence 104(a) and 702, act in a gatekeeping role by excluding unreliable scientific evidence.¹¹⁶⁸ In performing this function, the district court must determine whether the proffered scientific testimony is grounded in the methods and procedures of science by examining a non-exhaustive list of factors.¹¹⁶⁹ Those factors include: (1) whether the theory or technique can be (and has been) tested; (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error; and (4) the degree of acceptance within the scientific community.¹¹⁷⁰

In Joiner, the Supreme Court considered the standard of review to apply in reviewing a district court's exclusion of expert testimony under Daubert.¹¹⁷¹ The district court in Joiner

excluded the opinions of the plaintiff's expert under Daubert and granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.¹¹⁷² The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit reversed, stating the Federal Rules of Evidence displayed a preference for admissibility of expert testimony that warranted a particularly stringent standard of review.¹¹⁷³ The Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the appropriate standard of review for the appellate courts in reviewing a trial court's decision to admit or exclude evidence under Daubert.¹¹⁷⁴ The Court held the abuse of discretion standard was appropriate, rather than the more stringent standard suggested by the Eleventh Circuit.¹¹⁷⁵

In Kumho Tire, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve confusion in the lower courts regarding whether Daubert's standards related only to scientific evidence (often referred to as "hard science"), or whether the gatekeeping function also applied to "technical, or other specialized knowledge" categories of evidence (often referred to as "soft science").¹¹⁷⁶ The Court held that trial courts should apply the Daubert analysis to all expert testimony, not just scientific testimony.¹¹⁷⁷ The "trial court may consider one or more of the more specific factors that Daubert mentioned when doing so will help determine that testimony's reliability."¹¹⁷⁸ The Court reiterated that the test of reliability is "flexible" and the Daubert factors will not necessarily apply to all experts in every case,¹¹⁷⁹ a point often overlooked by practitioners who attempt to exclude all experts identified in their opponent's case.

Federal Rule of Evidence 702, which governs expert testimony, was amended in 2000 in response to Daubert and its progeny.¹¹⁸⁰ Rule 702 now reads:

If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert

by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.¹¹⁸¹

In federal court, the party seeking to proffer expert testimony must establish the relevancy and reliability of its expert's testimony—or risk the trial court's exclusion of the testimony pursuant to Daubert. These rules also implicate Texas summary judgment practice. Under Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 166a(i),¹¹⁸² the respondent to a “no-evidence” motion must be able to overcome a challenge pursuant to *E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson*¹¹⁸³ and *Gammill v. Jack Williams Chevrolet, Inc.*¹¹⁸⁴—the corollaries to Daubert and Kumho in Texas state court—when relying upon expert testimony to defeat a no-evidence summary judgment motion.¹¹⁸⁵ Accordingly, neither the movant nor the respondent can wait until trial to develop an expert's qualifications, given the potentially serious ramifications of exclusion of the expert's testimony at the dispositive motion stage.¹¹⁸⁶

As a practice point, counsel should consider filing a motion to exclude an expert together with its motion for summary judgment. If the respondent's case is dependent upon the admissibility of the expert's testimony, the district court may grant summary judgment contemporaneously with or shortly after excluding the expert's testimony. For example, in Barrett v. Atlantic Richfield Co., the district court excluded expert testimony because it was inadmissible under Daubert.¹¹⁸⁷ After striking the experts, the court granted summary judgment in the defendants' favor.¹¹⁸⁸ On appeal, the Fifth Circuit affirmed the exclusion of the expert's testimony under Daubert because the proposed testimony consisted of "unsupported speculation" and thus was unreliable.¹¹⁸⁹ The Fifth Circuit further affirmed the grant of summary judgment, noting, after striking the expert testimony, the plaintiffs failed to provide any further summary judgment evidence in support of their claims.¹¹⁹⁰

Additionally, in Michaels v. Avitech, Inc., a negligence action arising from the crash of a private plane, the Fifth Circuit indirectly considered the impact of Daubert expert testimony in the context of a summary judgment motion.¹¹⁹¹ The district court struck the expert's reports for violations of discovery disclosure requirements.¹¹⁹² The Fifth Circuit ruled the district court erred in striking the reports yet stated, "It remains to determine whether the plaintiff can withstand summary judgment, even considering all of his experts and reports."¹¹⁹³ The court noted the theory of the plaintiff's expert "would likely have been inadmissible at trial under Daubert," and it was "perhaps remiss to attempt a Daubert inquiry at the appellate level when the district court did not perform one."¹¹⁹⁴ Nevertheless, to determine whether the plaintiff provided sufficient and competent summary judgment evidence in his response, "it would be equally remiss for [the court] to ignore the fact that a plaintiff's expert evidence lacks any rational probative value."¹¹⁹⁵ On summary judgment, if the evidence gives rise to numerous inferences that are equally plausible, yet only one inference is consistent with the plaintiff's theory, the plaintiff does not satisfy his summary judgment burden, "absent at least some evidence that excludes the other potential [proximate] causes."¹¹⁹⁶ Because the plaintiff's expert made no attempt to rule out other sources of proximate cause, the court held his testimony was not "significantly probative" as to the issue of negligence and, thus, was insufficient to preclude

F. Objections to Evidence

In federal practice, objections to summary judgment evidence must be raised either orally or in writing at or before the hearing; otherwise, objections are ordinarily deemed waived.¹¹⁹⁸ The party contesting an affidavit has the burden to object to its inadmissible portions.¹¹⁹⁹ Failure to object allows the district court to consider the entire affidavit.

V. RULE 12(B)(6) MOTION TO DISMISS TREATED AS RULE 56 MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Where matters outside the pleadings are considered on a motion to dismiss, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) requires the court to treat the motion as one for summary judgment and to dispose of it as required by Rule 56.¹²⁰⁰ If a Rule 12(b)(6) motion has been converted to a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment, the summary judgment rule governs the standard of review.¹²⁰¹ In this manner, the respondent is entitled to the procedural safeguards of the summary judgment rule.¹²⁰²

Under Rule 56, the district court is not required to provide parties notice beyond its decision to treat a Rule 12(b)(6) motion as one for summary judgment.¹²⁰³ The standard is whether the opposing party had notice after the court accepted for consideration matters outside the pleadings.¹²⁰⁴ The notice required is only that the district court could treat the motion as one for summary judgment, not that the court would in fact do so.¹²⁰⁵

Washington v. Allstate Insurance Co. provides an example of this principle.¹²⁰⁶ In Washington, the defendant attached a copy of a statute to its motion to dismiss, and the plaintiff attached a copy of the repair estimates to his response.¹²⁰⁷ After twenty days passed, the court treated the defendant's motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment and granted the motion.¹²⁰⁸ The court determined the plaintiff was on notice that the trial court could treat the motion to dismiss as one for summary judgment because the parties attached documents to both the motion to dismiss and the response; therefore, the notice provisions of Rule 12(b) and Rule 56 were not violated.¹²⁰⁹

When a 12(b)(6) motion is converted to a summary judgment motion, the disposition of the motion does not turn on whether the complaint states a claim.¹²¹⁰ Rather, disposition depends on whether the plaintiff raised an issue of material fact which, if proved, would entitle him to relief as a matter of law.¹²¹¹ For example, in Bossard v. Exxon Corp., the district court granted the defendant's 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss after considering information outside the pleadings.¹²¹² The plaintiff appealed, arguing it stated a claim upon which relief could be granted.¹²¹³ The Fifth Circuit affirmed, noting that once a court considers evidence outside the pleadings, a 12(b)(6) motion is then treated as a motion for summary judgment requiring the nonmovant to show a genuine issue of material fact.¹²¹⁴

VI. APPEALING SUMMARY JUDGMENTS

A. When Summary Judgments Are Appealable

If the trial court grants summary judgment and disposes of all claims, the judgment is appealable.¹²¹⁵ But when the district court denies summary judgment, appeal is usually unavailable.¹²¹⁶ In this situation, the court's decision constitutes an interlocutory order from which the right to appeal is unavailable until entry of judgment following a trial on the merits.¹²¹⁷ Exceptions to this rule exist in situations such as the denial of qualified immunity.¹²¹⁸ Further, upon certification, the district court's denial of a motion for summary judgment may be reviewed by permissive interlocutory appeal,¹²¹⁹ but such certification is relatively rare.

Similarly, a grant of summary judgment in favor of one of several defendants is an unappealable interlocutory order.¹²²⁰ Yet one Fifth Circuit case stated that when a grant of summary judgment in favor of one defendant near the time of trial will prejudice the trial preparation of another defendant, the district court should continue the trial in order to allow an interlocutory appeal.¹²²¹

1215. See Miller v. Gorski Wladyslaw Estate, 547 F.3d 273, 277 n.1 (5th Cir. 2008) (finding appellant's notice of appeal of partial summary judgment premature because the judgment "neither disposed of the claims against all the defendants nor was it certified as a final judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b)"); Samaad v. City of Dallas, 940 F.2d 925, 940 (5th Cir. 1991) ("As a general rule, only a final judgment of the district court is appealable."). Caution must be taken in determining what is a final judgment for purposes of appeal. The pendency of a motion for attorney's fees, for example, does not prevent the running of time for filing a notice of appeal on the merits. Budinich v. Becton Dickinson & Co., 486 U.S. 196, 199–203 (1988); Treuter v. Kaufman County, Tex., 864 F.2d 1139, 1142–43 (5th Cir. 1989).

1216. See Skelton v. Camp, 234 F.3d 292, 295 (5th Cir. 2000) ("A denial of summary judgment is not a final order within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291.>").

Interestingly, a denial of summary judgment based on qualified immunity is immediately appealable only when it is based on a conclusion of law, while a denial of summary judgment based on qualified immunity is not immediately appealable if it is based on a factual dispute. Thibodeaux v. Harris Co., Tex., 215 F.3d 540, 541 (5th Cir. 2000) (per curiam).

Moreover, the Fifth Circuit “normally declines to review a ‘district court’s denial of motions for summary judgment when the case comes to [the appellate court] on the movant’s appeal following adverse judgment after full trial on the merits.’”¹²²² In Becker v. Tidewater, Inc., however, the Fifth Circuit agreed with the Ninth Circuit in determining that “denial of summary judgment is appealable after a trial on the merits when there was a ruling by the district court on an issue of law.”¹²²³ In that case, the district court denied defendants’ summary judgment motions on the validity of a reciprocal indemnity agreement in an admiralty case.¹²²⁴ Following an adverse outcome in a bench trial, the defendants appealed, among other things, the earlier denial of summary judgment.¹²²⁵ The Fifth Circuit determined it was appropriate to review the district court’s denial of appellants’ summary judgment motion because “the case was a bench trial,” and the appellants “appeal[ed] the district court’s legal conclusions in denying summary judgment.”¹²²⁶

B. Standard of Review on Appeal

In reviewing the district court’s ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the circuit court applies the same standards that govern the district court.¹²²⁷ Therefore, the appellate court will not affirm a summary judgment ruling unless, after de novo review,¹²²⁸ the record reflects “there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.”¹²²⁹

The Fifth Circuit has stated, “When a district court denies summary judgment on the basis that genuine issues of material fact exist, it has made two distinct legal conclusions: that there are ‘genuine’ issues of fact in dispute, and that these issues are ‘material.’”¹²³⁰ The appellate court may review a district court’s legal conclusion that issues are “material.”¹²³¹ However, it may not review a district court’s conclusion that issues of fact are “genuine.”¹²³²

Following this standard, the appellate court must “review the evidence and inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.”¹²³³ The court only considers admissible materials in the pretrial record.¹²³⁴ In contrast, the appellate court will decide questions of law in the same manner as it decides questions of law outside the summary judgment context—by de novo review.¹²³⁵ In diversity actions, the appellate court will review de novo the district court’s application of state law.¹²³⁶ The appellate court may affirm a summary judgment on any ground supported by the record—even grounds other than those stated by the trial court.¹²³⁷ While, generally,

C. The District Court’s Order on Summary Judgment

The prevailing movant should seek an order from the court with a specific finding that the movant carried his burden of proof and there is no genuine issue of material fact. This prevents the appellate court from having to “scour the entire record while it ponders the possible explanations” for the entry of summary judgment.¹²⁴⁰ Although Rule 56 technically does not require the trial court to state its reasons for granting a motion for summary judgment, the Fifth Circuit has stated that a detailed discussion is of great importance.¹²⁴¹ In all but the simplest case, a statement of the reasons for granting summary judgment usually proves “not only helpful but essential.”¹²⁴² The movant should therefore submit a proposed order with reasons for granting the motion rather than a form order merely stating the motion is granted.¹²⁴³

CONCLUSION

While following the technically complex summary judgment procedures detailed in this Article is fundamental, it does not ensure successful prosecution of, or defense against, a motion for summary judgment. Effective advocacy in summary judgment practice depends on strategic timing decisions, development and use of evidence, written persuasion, and an understanding of the particular judge and his or her procedures. These factors, combined with technical correctness, ultimately determine success in summary judgment practice.
