Adam Sencenbaugh in HR Magazine: ‘Federal Agenda Includes Plans to Revise Overtime and Joint Employer Rules’

By Adam H. Sencenbaugh | December 21, 2021

RELATED PRACTICES Wage and Hour Litigation, Employment Litigation, Labor and Employment, Litigation

The federal government recently released its fall 2021 regulatory agenda, which includes plans from the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL) to propose a new overtime rule and the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to revisit the joint employment standard under federal labor law.

"The agenda provides a listing of all regulations and ensures public engagement in the process of establishing regulations under active consideration … during the coming one-year period," according to the DOL.

Notably, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) did not submit a spring or fall agenda in 2021.

"The EEOC's failure to submit a regulatory agenda for the second time is interesting," said Adam Sencenbaugh, an attorney with Haynes Boone in Austin and San Antonio, Texas.

To read the full article, click here.

© 2026 Haynes and Boone, LLP