World Intellectual Property Review featured Haynes Boone Partner Purvi Patel Albers in a profile on what the #ChooseToChallenge International Women's Day campaign means to her as a woman in IP law.

Here is an excerpt:

Purvi Patel Albers, partner, Haynes Boone

“Over the last year, I, like so many others, have processed that I need to rewire my brain and call myself out for implicit bias—just because I am a diverse woman does not mean that I have met the antiracist goalpost that we should all seek to attain. In addition, I choose to challenge those who self-label with terms like ‘girl boss’ or ‘boss babe,’ as they truly undermine the goal of equity.

“The inventorship gap continues to be a big issue for women in IP. I was lucky to have a (male) mentor and sponsor—I want to move this forward with the hopes that future generations will do the same.”
