Ramish in Bloomberg Law: Grants Dispute Opinion Highlights Supreme Court's Loose Ends

November 19, 2026

RELATED PRACTICES Government Contracts, Federal Assistance: Grants and Cooperative Agreements

The Fourth Circuit's reopening of a grant funds dispute between the Education Department and two Virginia school districts concerning transgender student policies reignited attorneys' calls for the U.S. Supreme Court to clarify a complex jurisdictional issue. Haynes Boone Partner Dan Ramish spoke with Bloomberg Law about the majority's opinion

Read an excerpt below.

The majority's opinion is helpful authority for the view that lower courts shouldn't overread the shadow docket decisions to require "sending every dispute touching federal grants" to the claims court, said Daniel Ramish of Haynes Boone. Grants "interact with an array of statutes and often exist at the intersection of administrative law and contract law," he said, and the "jurisdictional line is not completely clear."

Read the full Bloomberg Law article here.

© 2026 Haynes and Boone, LLP