As healthcare providers increasingly adopt AI-powered ambient notetakers, legal questions are emerging around privacy, consent and potential liability for inadvertently captured conversations. Haynes Boone Partner Jennifer Kreick spoke with Law360 about how these technologies are creating new legal risks beyond traditional healthcare privacy concerns.

Read an excerpt below.

Jennifer Kreick, co-chair of Haynes Boone's Healthcare and Life Sciences Practice Group, told Law360 these new legal theories aren't necessarily traditional healthcare privacy claims.

"While these cases remain in the early stages and many of the legal questions have yet to be resolved by the courts, they highlight the potential risks that can arise when ambient AI captures communications," she said via email.
