

IRS Launches Affordable Care Act Tax Provisions Website

August 30, 2013

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) recently launched a new website to explain tax provisions under the Affordable Care Act (ACA) that are in effect now and those that will go into effect in 2014 and beyond. The website's home page is divided into three sections that explain the various tax benefits and responsibilities for (1) individuals and families, (2) employers, and (3) other organizations, such as insurers and tax exempt organizations. Topics covered include, among other things, premium tax credits for individuals as well as new benefits and responsibilities for employers. The IRS also released an online flyer to help individuals locate ACA resources available through other government organizations. The IRS's new ACA website is available here.
