Formation of the PCC and dedicated cell deployment enables Octopus Ventures to invest in the revolutionary Kraken technology platform

Haynes Boone has advised long-standing client Octopus Ventures on the formation of its Jersey protected cell company (PCC) and the launch of its first cell, a Jersey protected cell investing in Kraken, a revolutionary energy technology platform. The cell raised funds from a broad base of investors, including a £25 million investment from British Business Bank as its anchor. The investment marks British Business Bank's largest direct investment to date.

The PCC structure provides Octopus with a flexible and efficient investment platform to pursue deal-by-deal opportunities, segregating assets and liabilities by "ring-fencing" each of the PCC's cells. The Haynes Boone team further advised on the cell's deployment into Kraken as part of its broader $1 billion demerger from Octopus Energy Group at a valuation of $8.65 billion.

Launched within the Octopus Energy Group, Kraken is an AI-powered operating system for energy and utility companies contracted to serve over 70 million accounts worldwide. Kraken has grown into the world's most advanced, proven data-driven operating system for utilities.

The Haynes Boone team was led by London Investment Management Partners Karma Samdup, Andrew Pannell and Ronan McCann, and London Associate Mina-Marie Doherty, who played a central role in the day-to-day running of the transaction.
