

Haynes Boone Relocates and Increases Size of Washington, D.C. Office

May 5, 2025

Haynes Boone is pleased to announce the relocation of its Washington, D.C. office to 888 16th St NW, marking a significant milestone in the firm's efforts to strengthen its presence in the capital. With a 35-year history in D.C., the firm is underscoring its long-term commitment to the region's business and legal community through the relocation and growth.

In the new space, Haynes Boone will occupy two floors instead of one, aligning with the firm's commitment to expansion in D.C. and continuing efforts to create a lasting footprint in the nation's capital. The firm will be adding over 8,000 square feet in the move.

"Our investment in new office space is all about value for our clients as well for our lawyers and business professionals who come to work here every day," said Adrian Azer, D.C. office managing partner. "This state-of-the-art office will enhance our ability to serve clients and foster collaboration among our team."

The new space presents exciting opportunities for recruiting top talent, with inviting collaborative areas and a completely renovated footprint that matches what the firm has done in a wave of office relocations across North America since 2022. The space will foster collaboration amongst attorneys and staff with ample room to host clients, local bar organizations and industry events.

Haynes Boone's Washington, D.C. office is now located just a block from the White House, allowing lawyers to maintain excellent working relationships with senior federal government officials. The firm's lawyers in D.C. span many practice areas, including government contracts, federal circuit appeals, international trade, insurance recovery, intellectual property, investment management, energy and finance.
