Partner Ken Parker and Associate Daniel Lammie authored an article in Bloomberg Law discussing the International Trade Commission exclusion orders.

Read an excerpt below:

An investigation before the US International Trade Commission (ITC) is complete, and the ITC issued an exclusion order preventing the respondent from importing infringing goods into the US. A party might wonder: Now what?

Indeed, any exclusion order carries with it the immense power of bringing the importation and sales of a good to a screeching halt. A respondent might wonder whether it can import redesigned or newly designed goods potentially subject to the exclusion order, and a complainant might believe that the worst is behind them.
