Partner Jason Jordan and Counsel Ryan Paulsen authored an article in The Texas Lawbook discussing a recent Texas Supreme Court ruling with important practical implications for the attorney-client privilege under Texas law.

Read an excerpt below:

Last week, the United States Supreme Court and Texas Supreme Court issued several high-profile opinions as they cleared the dockets from last year's terms. With so many rulings issued at once, it could be easy to miss an opinion from the Texas Supreme Court with important practical implications for the attorney-client privilege under Texas law — in particular, the scope of protection for communications by a "lawyer's representative."
