

Used DVD and Video Game Resales One Step Closer to Extinction

January 20, 2011 Randall Colson

PRACTICES Intellectual Property

Your favorite local and online video game and DVD resellers may become extinct due to a September 10, 2010 Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling.

Whether through online auctions or local resale stores, consumers have become used to turning unwanted or unused products into cash or credits for future purchases, as well as purchasing second-hand products at a discount. In particular, a robust market in used DVDs and video games has developed in the last few years. Consumers can now easily monetize those DVDs and video games that have been watched, completed, or perhaps tossed aside due to frustration.

Read the full article.