PRACTICES Offshore Oil and Gas, Oilfield Services, Oil and Gas, Energy, Power and Natural Resources, Europe, Middle East and Africa

Phoebe Anderson is an integral member of the Oil and Gas and Commercial teams at Haynes and Boone in London. She has recently been recognised as a “Key Lawyer” and “Rising Star” in the Oil and Gas section of the 2021 UK edition of The Legal 500, the international directory of law firms, in which she was also recommended for commercial contracts.

Phoebe's practice focuses on projects for the offshore exploration and production (E&P) of oil and gas, and clients value her in-depth knowledge and capability in this specialist sector. She also has experience in commercial contracts generally, and regularly advises on contractual matters across a range of industries.

Phoebe joined Haynes and Boone in April 2016 after beginning her legal career in Australia, where she represented clients in the energy, oil and gas, and construction sectors for seven years at HWL Ebsworth Lawyers, Australia's largest legal partnership. She has also worked as in-house legal counsel for one of the leading telecommunications service providers in the UK, negotiating business-to-business contracts and supporting the digital development team. Phoebe is an Australian qualified lawyer which allows her to practice law in England.

At Haynes and Boone, Phoebe advises the firm's offshore contractor clients on complex contractual matters, and negotiates contracts for drilling units and floating production storage and offload (FPSO) facilities in offshore locations around the world. She has a particular interest in the renewable energy sector and in sustainable ship recycling, and advises vessel owners on the disposal of their end-of-life assets destined for recycling. In addition to the energy sector, Phoebe advises clients on commercial matters in a range of industries, including transportation and technology.

Phoebe is dedicated to her clients and continuously strives to improve the quality of service she provides. She has a versatile skill set and is capable of taking on new challenges. Whilst having a predominantly transactional background, Phoebe's specialisation in the offshore sector now allows her to advise clients on both non-contentious and contentious matters in this sector. Phoebe advises clients on shipbuilding contracts and disputes, acting for either the shipyard or the buyer. She recently acted for a major drilling contractor in relation to an LMAA arbitration concerning the termination of a newbuild contract.

Phoebe understands her clients' commercial objectives and adopts a business-like, common sense approach to her work, ensuring that her clients achieve the best possible commercial outcome and minimising the risk of potential disputes.

She works closely with her clients' contract managers and in-house counsel, often providing training on contract reviews and key legal issues. In addition to her client matters, Phoebe regularly contributes articles for various legal and industry publications, including the Petroleum Review and Lloyd's List, and has assisted the International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC) to update their offshore daywork drilling contract.

Phoebe also undertakes pro bono work for a charity supporting seriously ill children in conjunction with LawWorks, and leads the firm's Sustainability Committee in London.
