Matt Costello maintains a diverse practice, with a key focus on counseling and defending clients in state and federal court employment litigation.

Matt handles all facets of day-to-day case management in court, arbitration, and administrative agency employment matters, including early case evaluations, drafting and responding to discovery, witness interviews, taking and defending depositions, motion drafting, and communicating directly with clients to ensure close, effective working relationships. He has obtained favorable results for Fortune 500 companies spanning a variety of industries, including energy, healthcare, and technology, in a wide range of single-plaintiff, complex, and class action employment cases involving allegations of discrimination, harassment, wrongful termination, and wage and hour violations.

Matt also regularly counsels corporate clients on internal investigations, employee handbooks and policies, discrimination and harassment prevention, employee hiring and terminations, and restrictive covenants in employee contracts. He has also represented clients in complex business disputes, including trade secrets and unfair competition litigation.

Matt is dedicated to pro bono work. He works closely with the Public Law Center, a pro-bono law firm that provides access to justice for low-income residents of Orange County, California. For example, Matt assisted an Army veteran in seeking a discharge upgrade, including appearing before the Army Discharge Review Board in Washington, D.C. where he first-chaired a hearing before a five-officer military tribunal. Matt was also an integral part of a team of Haynes and Boone lawyers who partnered with several public interest groups to bring a housing discrimination lawsuit triggered by a local municipality's efforts to shutter motels that provided long-term housing to residents of limited means, including many families with children or people with disabilities.
